None of the parties litigating under S. 145 can be called an accused person and so the provisions of S. 343 (4), that no oath shall be administered to an accused person, do not prevent the examination of the parties to a litigation under S. 145, Cr. P. C. on oath. (Dalal, J. C.) CHOUDHURI MOHAMMAD AYUB v. CHAUDHURY SARFARAZ AHMUD. 83 I. C. 630 = 26 Cr. L. J. 70 = A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 286.

—S. 428, Cr. P. Code, —Prejudice to accused.

In S. 428 of the Code there is no provision that the accused should be examined after the prosecution evidence is taken and as the examination of witnesses after remand may be made even in the absence of the accused the provisions of S. 342 do not apply to it.

Per Bucknill, J.—In conceivable cases where fresh evidence on a remand has been taken the applicant ought to be given on opportunity of making a statement, i. e., in effect of being examined by the Magistrate; but provided the accused has in fact had a reasonable and substantial opportunity of exercising the privilege accorded to him by the provisions of S. 342, that is of either orally or in writing saying what he wishes to say in explanation of what has been alleged against him, a technical failure or omission in the procedure ought not to be regarded as rendering a trial, wholly nugatory should such omission or failure be shown to have prejudiced the accused the matter assumes a different aspect and should be remedied, but not otherwise. —Failure to put questions.

Noncompliance with the mandatory provisions of the second part of Cl. (1), S. 342, requiring that the Magistrate shall question the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called upon for his defence, is a serious illegality sufficient to vitiate the trial, at any rate from the stage at which the accused should have been so examined. (Tek Chand, J.) PRITCHAND v. EMPEROR. 112 I. C. 850 = 30 Cr. L. J. 18 = 11 A. I. Cr. R. 405 = A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 382

—Cr. P. C., S. 342—De novo trial.

Where the magistrate trying the case was transferred and his successor began the trial de novo but did not again examine the accused under S. 342.

Held, it is not only a rule but principle that a Magistrate, who tries a case in the sense of "decides", must give the accused an opportunity of explaining any points which may have been made against him and must hear what he has to say, and it is not sufficient for his predecessor-in-office to have done so. Where such a procedure is not followed, the whole proceedings are vitiated. (Harrison, J.) AKTAR MAHOMED v. EMPEROR. 106 I. C. 717 = 29 Cr. L. J. 125 = A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 720.

—Once examined.

When the accused has been examined under S. 342 after the conclusion of the prosecution evidence it is not necessary to examine him again after the further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses. A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 84, Ref. (Shadi Lal, C. J.) FAZAL CARIM v. EMPEROR. 99 I. C. 842 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1418 = A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 154.

—Further examination.

The examination of prosecution witnesses under S. 540, after they are re-called by the Court, is no part of the prosecution case and the accused need not be examined under S. 342 once again after such examination. (Hallifax, A. J. C.) PAI MAHAMAD v. EMPEROR. 93 I. C. 699 = 27 Cr. L. J. 475 = A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 348.

—Called on his defence.

There can be no difference in the meaning between the words "called upon to enter upon his defence" in S. 253 and "called on for his defence" in S. 342 (1923 Cal. 727, Appr.) The obligation imposed by S. 256 on the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witness is quite distinct from the obligation imposed by S. 342 to question the accused generally for the purposes mentioned therein. (MacLeod, C. J. and Crump, J.) EMPEROR v. NATHU KASTURCHAND MARWADI. 86 I. C. 66 = 27 Bom. L. R. 105 = 26 Cr. L. J. 690 = 50 Bom. 42 = A. I. R. 1925 Bom 170.

—Questioning accused is mandatory.

The word "shall" in the section makes the duty imposed on the Court, of questioning the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence, mandatory. Where the accused was examined after only a part of the prosecution evidence had been recorded and was not examined again after all the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined.

Held, that the trial was vitiated. (Scott-Smith, J.) GHAZA ALI v. EMPEROR. 6 L. L. J. 618 = 27 Cr. L. J. 87 = 91 I. C. 391 = A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 288.

—When the accused is to be questioned.

The expression "after the witness for prosecution have been examined" includes their cross-examination after the charge where the accused has reralled them under S. 256, as examination of a witness means his examination in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination. Magistrates should invariably question the accused generally on the case after the examination of a prosecution witness is over, i. e., they are examined-in-chief, cross-examined and re-examined and before he enters upon his defence. The latter portion of S. 342 is imperative. (Baker, J. C. Pridcaux and Kinkhede, A. J. Cs.) LOCAL GOVERNMENT v. MARIA. 87 I. C. 427 = 20 N. L. R. 174 =

— Fresh examination of accused after examination of prosecution witnesses recalled by accused is not necessary. But it is often desirable that the accused should be asked whether he has any additional statement to make. ## — 'Examine'

The accused was standing his trial in a warrant case on a charge under S. 500 of the Indian Penal Code. After the prosecution witnesses had been examined-in-chief the accused was questioned generally on the case by the Magistrate. Thereafter cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses took place, but the accused was not again examined generally.

Held, that the word "examine" in S. 342 is to be taken in the ordinary English sense in which it covers all kinds of examination including cross-examination and re-examination, and that the accused should have been examined again, after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and cross-examined. — Questioning the accused after examining the recalled prosecution witnesses.

Cross-examination of re-called prosecution witnesses under S. 256 is not an examination of prosecution witnesses within the meaning of S. 342 and therefore omission to question the accused after this examination of re-called prosecution witnesses is not an illegality. This cross-examination is rather an evidence for the defence than evidence for the prosecution. A. I. R. 1922 M. 512; 45 Mad. 820 Overruled, 6 P.L.J. 644 Diss.

Devadoss, J.—The contention that, if an accused person cross-examines any of the prosecution witnesses under S. 256, the Magistrate is bound once more to examine the accused generally on the case seems untenable. S. 342 means only that the examination of the accused should take place after the prosecution has placed its whole case before the Court. The accused in a warrant case has three opportunities of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses; once before the charge is framed, secondly under S. 256 and thirdly after he has entered on his defence. The words in S. 342 "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined," cannot reasonably be interpreted to mean "after the accused has chosen to exercise his right of cross-examination at the very end of his defence."

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—(Dissenting). The point of time indicated in S. 342 is between close of the prosecution case and the entering by the accused upon his defence and non-examination after re-cross-examination vitiates trial. —Procedure.

The omission to question the accused generally on the case as required by the latter part of S. 342 (1) of Cr. P. Code is not a mere irregularity but it is an illegality which vitiates the whole trial. S. 342 makes the examination of the accused obligatory only in cases where the accused is called on for his defence. If the Magistrate discharges the accused without framing a charge the non-examination of the accused would not vitiate the proceedings. But where a Magistrate or the Sessions Court thinks that the prosecution witnesses have made out a case which the accused has to meet, it is incumbent upon him not to put him the general question, "You have heard the prosecution witnesses against you; say what you have got to say", but to communicate to the accused by appropriate questions everything that is alleged against him in the evidence for the prosecution to its full extent, which may be found necessary to communicate in each particular case, with a view to ascertain from him what explanation or defence in law or in fact he wishes to put forward in respect thereof. —Nature of questions.

Where there was an examination of the accused before the charges were framed, held, after the witnesses for the prosecution have all been examined and cross-examined and before the accused is called on for his defence, it is compulsory for the Court to question the accused in such a way as to enable him to explain any circumstances which appear in the evidence against him. The mere asking the accused as to whether they had any thing further to say is not a sufficient compliance with the second part of the provision of S. 342. The question must be framed in such a way as to enable the accused to know what he is to explain, as to what are the circumstances which are against him and for which an explanation is needed. 5 P. —S. 342—Object of.

—In both S. 209 and S. 342, the examination of the accused is stated to be "for enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him." It is not proper for the Court in examining the accused to seek in any way to entrap him into admissions which may fill gaps in the prosecution case but the answers given to the accused in answer to the straightforward questions put by the Court may no doubt be taken into consideration for convicting the accused under S. 342 (3). —Complicated cases.

Object of examination of accused is to enable him to explain anything appearing in evidence against him. In complicated cases general questions asking him what he has to say in explanation of evidence against him is insufficient. Thus where the prosecution is mainly based on the contents of the documents which are obscure and capable of more explanations than one it is of special importance that the accused should be asked specifically as to what his explanation of the doubtful passages is. J. 769 = A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 382.

—Sufficient compliance.

What is necessary under S. 342 is that the accused should be brought face to face solemnly with an opportunity given to him to make a statement from his place in the dock in order that the Court may have the advantage of hearing his defence, if he is willing to make one with his own lips. Where five accused were tried and to all the accused the same question was put, "What is your defence," two of them replied, "I am innocent. I will file a written statement," and the other two replied, "I am innocent."

Held, that that was sufficient compliance with S. 342. A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 470, Rel. on. (Newbould and Chakravarti, J.J.) REZ MUHAMMAD v. EMPEROR. 90 I. C. 294 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1510 = A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 424.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 342—Object of.*—Procedure.

It is extremely desirable that Magistrates should follow the practice of warning accused persons when they invite their explanation under S. 342 that they are not obliged to say anything unless they desire to do so. The object of the section should be to give them an opportunity, if they so desire, to explain their conduct and further warn them that anything they say will be put in evidence against them at their trial. (Coutts Trotter, C. J. and Madhavan Nair, J.) KANNAMMAL, In re. 92 I. C. 695 = 23 M. L. W. 384 = 27 Cr. L. J. 311 = A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 570.

—Salient points should be mentioned to accused.

Mukerji, J.—The section is undoubtedly for the benefit of the accused but it cannot be said that it is intended merely for his benefit. It is a part of a system for enabling the Court to discover the truth and it constantly happens that the accused's explanation or his failure to explain, is the most incriminating circumstance against him. The result of the examination may certainly benefit the accused if a satisfactory explanation is offered by him; it may, however, be injurious to him, if no explanation or a false or unsatisfactory explanation is given. It follows from the wording of the section that the Court should not only have the power to point out to the accused the circumstances appearing in the evidence which require explanation, but that it must, out of fairness to the accused, exercise that power in such a way that the accused may know what points in the opinion of the Court require explanation, failure or refusal to give which will entitle the Court to draw an inference against him. (Newbould and Mukerji, J.J.) EMPEROR v. ALIMUDDI NASKAR. 85 I. C. 919 = 41 C. L. J. 101 = 29 C. W. N. 231 = 26 Cr. L. J. 631 = 52 Cal. 522 = A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 361.

—Scope of the questions.

The object of S. 342 is to enable the accused in his own interest to give an explanation of the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. It is not competent for the Court to examine the accused for the purpose of filling up gaps in the evidence for the prosecution. Any examination of an inquisitorial nature is both improper and illegal. It is also not permissible for the Magistrate to examine the accused as to what certain absent defence witnesses would be likely to state and the like. 7 C. W. N. 345, Ref. (Findlay, Offg. J. C.) MAHADEO SINGH v. EMPEROR. 91 I. C. 242 = 8 N. L. J. 190 = 27 Cr. L. J. 66 = 22 N. L. E. 1 = A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 403.

—Nature of questions.

Principle requires that the accused shall not be convicted without being given an opportunity of explaining the allegations against him. Experience shows that judicial questioning must not become inquisitorial. If these essentials are secured, the trial cannot be impeached. The trial is not vitiated from any deviation from the section unless the accused has been prejudiced in his defence. Principles discussed historically and elaborately. (Mullick and Bucknill, J.J.) SAIYID MOHIUDDIN v. EMPEROR. 86 I. C. 459 = 4 Pat. 488 = 6 P. L. T. 154 = 3 Pat. L. E. Cr. 110 = 26 Cr. L. J. 811 = 1925 P. H. C. C. 112 = A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 414.

—Nature of questions.

Examination under S. 342 is intended to enable the accused to explain the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him and is not intended to supplement prosecution case and to show that the accused is guilty nor to drive him to make self-incriminating statement. The Judge is therefore not entitled to put embarrassing questions to draw admissions from accused. (Kennedy,

—Nature of questions.

Where the only question asked by the Magistrate to the accused was "what have you to say regarding the statement of the complainant's witnesses?"

Held, this was not a sufficient compliance with the requirement of the Law. The object of the section is to enable the accused to explain each and every circumstance appearing in evidence against him. A Judge or a Magistrate should note every point which he thinks he will have to put into the scale against the accused and then question him on each point; otherwise it is impossible for the accused to know what is in the Court's mind. Bearing in mind that the accused is not bound to set up any defence or make any statement, that what he elects to say is not evidence, that an explanation that he may proffer, need not be true; and that he does not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer any question that the Court may put to him or by giving a false answer to the question, it becomes obvious that the Court is not entitled under this S. 342 to administer an inquisitorial interrogatory to the accused or to subject him to cross-examination or to ask any questions of him with a view to elicit the truth of the matter, or by a series of supplementary questions to test the accuracy or reliability of the answers that he has been willing to give. An examination on these or similar lines is not within the ambit of S. 342 and all such questions are wholly inadmissible. When once the Court is satisfied that the accused appreciates the salient features of the evidence against him, its function under S. 342 is exhausted and no further examination is permissible. 50 Cal. 518. Under S. 342 in order to enable the accused to know what are the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him and what the Court considers to be such circumstances, it is necessary for the Court to put those circumstances directly to the accused and to ask him to explain those circumstances if he can. The object of S. 342, Cr. P. Code, is to enable the accused to know what in the opinion of the Court are the circumstances which from the evidence appear to be against him. completely examined. When the accused enters upon his defence the stage at which he must be examined under S. 342 passes. After the prosecution has closed its case by examining its witness in chief and submitting them to cross-examination and re-examination, the accused cannot re-open the prosecution case by applying for an indulgence from the Court for further cross-examination and then claim the right that he should be examined over again. —Substitute for oral statement.

S. 256 of the Code directs the Court to accept a written statement and it is intended that the Court should read it; and if an accused states that he will file a written statement, the writing is to be accepted in lieu of his oral statement.

Where after the examination-in-chief of the Prosecution witnesses, the accused was examined and afterwards the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined and re-examined and the accused was asked as to whether he had anything to say, and the accused also filed a written statement,

Held, that the fact that the accused was asked whether he had anything more to say, after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses made it unnecessary to apply the principle of Mitrajit Singh v. Emperor, (1921) 2 P. L. T. 520.

Held, further that even if the Magistrate had not taken the precaution to examine the accused orally as said above the written statement filed by the accused after the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses would have relieved the Magistrate from the necessity of examining him orally in reference to the matters elicited in the cross-examination, and re examination of the prosecution witnesses. —Pending civil suit.

Applications for staying of criminal proceedings during the pendency of a civil suit are sometimes argued as if there were an invariable rule that when the same issue is agitated both in the civil and criminal side, the civil shall take precedence of the criminal Court. This is not so. Each case must be considered on its own merits and the only general rule that can be adumbrated is that every Court should be left as far as possible to dispose of the cases on its file with the utmost expedition.

It must be assumed that in either Court justice will be done and which Court precedes the other is merely a question of convenience. (Jackson, J.) CHITRALA RAMIAH v. NATUKULA RAMIAH.

—Power of Court—Compounding offence by award.

A criminal case is not a matter between parties as a civil case is. A Magistrate is not bound to recognize a reference to arbitration and wait for the arbitrators to make the award though it will be reasonable to do so. If he does not choose to wait, he will not be doing anything illegal. But if he chooses to wait and then there is an award, that award may amount to a compounding of the offence in question, and if it is an offence compoundable under S. 345 effect will be given to such compounding. But till the actual compounding takes place the Magistrate is not bound at all to stay his hands but may go on with the trial of the case himself. (Krishnan, J.) RAMALINGA AIYAR v. —S. 345—Permission.

According to law the Magistrate trying the case has to exercise his own discretion as to whether a compromise is to be allowed or not in a challan case. He is wrong when he refers the case to the District Magistrate. (Shadi Lal, C. J.) PARTAB SINGH v. EMPEROR. 127 I. C. 712=1930 Cr. C. 304=31 P. L. R. 121=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 272.

—Absence of.

In cases governed by S. 345 (2), Cr. P. Code, the permission of the Court before which a prosecution is pending is essential before the case can be validly compounded, and so no effect can be given to a compromise as a plea in bar of conviction unless the Court has given its sanction. Without the sanction of the Court, the so-called compromise arrived at between the parties, outside the Court, is of no legal effect and cannot be taken cognizance of by any Court dealing with the offence. 41 Mad. 685, Rel. on 39 Mad. 946, Dist. —Nature of the complaint not the result.

The procedure under which a case is tried is governed by the nature of the offence complained of and not by the ultimate result. The same analogy applies to a case of compounding. The question of a case being compoundable or not must be decided with reference to the state of facts existing at the date of the application to compound. It is not possible for a Court to see what the ultimate result of the case will be. Where at the stage at which the application to compound was presented, the case was going on as a case under S. 325, I. P. C., which is not compoundable without the leave of the Court.

Before the commencement of the enquiry or trial if the Magistrate is of opinion that the case is one which for any reason ought to be tried by the Court of Sessions then he has ample power to inquire into the case with a view to commitment and subsequently to commit, if the evidence justifies the Court. S. 347 is couched in general terms and gives the Magistrate very wide powers. There is no suggestion that the only possible reason for a competent Magistrate to commit a case is that he will not be able to pass a sufficiently severe sentence. The discretion vested in the Magistrate cannot be limited by the provisions of S. 254. (Brown, J.) EMPEROR v. ISHAHAT. 89 I. C. 525 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1389 =

The Magistrate who tried the case was transferred when most of the witnesses had been examined. The succeeding Magistrate granted a de novo trial. After this Dt. Held, that even the Magistrate to whom the case was thus transferred could not take up the case from the point at which he had left it and that he must start the case only de novo all the previous proceedings being considered to have been wiped out.

—Charge for two offences—Witnesses same—Evidence let in one case—Copies of the evidence recorded in the other—Procedure illegal.

A person was charged with two offences namely under S. 307, I.P. C. and under S. 20, Indian Arms Act. The witnesses in the two cases were more or less the same. The trying Magistrate recorded the evidence of the witnesses in the case under S. 307 and copies of the evidence of these witnesses were placed on the record of the case under S. 20, Arms Act expect the case of one witness who did not appear in the case under S. 307.

Held, that the procedure was illegal and the trial was vitiated. The general rule in the case of criminal trial is that there should be a separate trial with respect of each distinct offence. The object evidently is that the attention of the trial Court should be directed to the evidence relating to the charge under inquiry and irrelevant matter should be excluded. This object is not achieved but defeated by placing on the record mere copies of the statements of witnesses recorded during the course of a trial relating to another charge. A. I. ## —Provisions mandatory.

In a criminal trial the deposition of each of the prosecution witnesses was not read over or explained to him after it had been recorded but the depositions of the witnesses examined on the day were read to them after the close of the day's proceedings.

Held, that that is not sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 360. S. 360 is mandatory and its provision must be strictly complied with. This view is based on the wording of the section itself and on the policy underlying it, namely, to protect the witness and also to safeguard the interest of the accused by affording to the witness as well as the accused an opportunity of finding any inaccuracy in the record of the deposition. The provisions of S. 360 are mandatory. But non-compliance does not legally result in the total inadmissibility of the record of evidence and in the absence of any definite provision of law entailing inadmissibility, each case of non-compliance must be considered by the Court on its own merits and the document which purports to be the record can be admitted, but without the presumption laid down in S. 80 of the Evidence Act, and, therefore, open to question by the defence and appraisal by the Court. —Plea of accused if charge is based on the record.

Any irregularity in recording the statement under S. 360 will not render it totally inadmissible in evidence. If a statement is properly recorded under S. 360 then under S. 80 of the Evidence Act a strong presumption arises that the deponent stated in his evidence what appears in the deposition. If however S. 360 is not complied with, that presumption does not arise, and it is necessary for the person who alleges that the memorandum, which purports to be a deposition, but has been irregularly recorded, is accurate, to prove that it is accurate, if its accuracy is challenged. Where therefore a deponent is being tried for making a false deposition and where the provisions of S. 360 have not been strictly complied with, it would always be open for the deponent to say that it was unjust that he should be prosecuted for a perjured statement because if he had been given full opportunity he would have stated the truth in Court. But this sort of plea will not avail an abettor. (Kennedy, J. C. and Aston, A. J. C.) PITOMAL v. EMPEROR.

ment of a witness was read over to him. Further, the section does not lay down that the deposition should be read over to the witness within the hearing of the accused. The purpose of the section is to enable the witness to safeguard himself. If the accused or his pleader is doubtful as to the manner in which statements of a witness have been recorded or as to any point in the deposition, they would have a right to ask that the deposition should be read over to them, so that they can satisfy themselves as to what has been actually recorded, but that demand should be made at once. —Failure to comply—Irrregularity.

Per Maung Ba, J.—The sole object of this provision of the law seems to be to ensure the accuracy of the record. A proposition that failure to strictly comply with the provisions of S. 360 will under any circumstances vitiate a trial, no matter whether it has caused a failure of justice or not, is too broad. Failure to strictly comply with the provision of S. 360 should be considered as a mere irregularity curable by S. 537 if no prejudice is caused. Each case should be decided on its own merits.

Per Doyle, J.—Disobedience of S. 360 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is an irregularity not amounting to an illegality. The convenience of advocates or a desire to accelerate the disposal of a case are not sufficient reasons for disobeying a mandatory injunction. ## —S. 364—Questions to accused.

—Where there has been no enquiry.

Section 364 authorizes a Magistrate to put questions to accused in order to enable him to explain any evidence that may have been produced against him during the inquiry or trial but where no inquiry had been made, the accused cannot be questioned. A Magistrate before whom a person accused under S. 302, I. P. C. was produced and who had made a confession, after asking him the preliminary questions for satisfying himself that he was making the confession voluntarily, put him the following question, instead of allowing him to make any statement he liked, "Did you on 27th August at M, commit murder of S, deceased, intentionally causing injuries to him with a hatchet".

Held, that the question was not justified under the circumstances, as there were no facts before the Magistrate nor was there any evidence on which he could formulate such question. S. 364 had no application to a case like this. No inquiry having been made or commenced in the Court, the question could not be asked under S. 364. (Jai Lal and Bhide, J.) PAHLAWAN v. ## —S. 366—Bench Court.

—Judgment—Writing and delivering of.

Section 366 requires that the judgment of a criminal Court should be pronounced by the Court. When the members composing the Bench leave the Bench, there is no Court at all. The mere fact that the presiding officer sits in the Court-room and writes his judgment, will not make that a Court. The mere delivery of a judgment may be left to the presiding officer by the other members of the Bench, but they must be aware of what the judgment contains. Judgment prepared by the presiding officer after other members left the Bench, is not a proper judgment at all. (Devadoss, J.) RAMAKOTIAH v. SUBBA RAO. 28 M. L. W. 498=1928 M. W. N. 785=11 A. I. —Court deciding without issuing notice.

Where the appellant's pleader fails to make out a case for the issue of notice to the Public Prosecutor and the appellate Court thinks fit to decide the case without such notice, a formal order or judgment giving reasons is necessary to dispose of the appeal. There must be sufficient material in the appellate judgment itself to show that the appeal has been properly tried. The judgment or order must bear marks of such intelligent appreciation on the part of the appellate Court of the necessary facts and materials as would warrant the High Court to infer that the conclusions were properly arrived at by the lower appellate Court. —Complicated cases.

Judgment of an appellate Court ought to contain particulars so as to satisfy the revisional Court that the case has been examined from every aspect. In simple cases where the facts are clear no further reason than that the evidence is accepted by the Judge may be strictly required. In complicated cases, however, specially when there are more than one question, both of law and fact, arising, a mere statement of this kind will have to be accepted with difficulty as amounting to a reason for the dismissal of the appeal. 19 All. 506, Rel. on. —Curable irregularity.

Where the only case in appeal was one of considering whether the evidence did justify the conclusion that the accused persons were responsible for a particular act, and the appellate Court did not state in its judgment the points for determination, and the reasons for a finding on each point specifically in the manner contemplated by Ss. 367 and 424, but in fact it had gone into the case and said, "The Magistrate's findings of fact are fully justified by the evidence",

Held, there was not an "absence" of a judgment and the irregularity in drawing up the judgment was curable under S. 537. (Fawcett and Madgavkar, J.J.) PATIL v. BUVA RAOJIBALA v. EMPEROR. 28 Bom. L. R. 1029 = 27 Cr. L. J. 1153 = 97 I. C. 737 = A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 512.

—Discussion of evidence.

If the judgment of an appellate Court does not discuss evidence and does not give facts indicating the occurrence dealt with in it the judgment is not a judgment under S. 367, Cr. P. Code. —Several accused.

The judgment of an appellate Court should show on the face of it that the case of each accused in joint trial has been separately taken into consideration. The appellate Court should so far as necessary state reasons showing that it has devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused. The judgment must be such that the High Court as a Court of revision might be in a position to see what the case was and how the Court of appeal has considered the evidence as to the guilt or innocence of each of the accused. Therefore the appellate Court should give an explicit opinion as to the question of facts involved in the case and must form its opinion about the evidence after perusing the record. —Should be complete by itself.

Where the appellate court's judgment disposed of appeals in two cases, one dealing with five accused and the other with three, but it did not mention the name of any of the accused or the name of any of the witnesses produced by the prosecution or the defence, and thus it was impossible to follow the appellate judgment without reading the judgment of the court of first instance, held that the judgment was not in accordance with S. 367. —Should be complete by itself.

Under S. 424 of the Cr. P. Code the rules contained in S. 367 as to the judgment of a Criminal Court of original jurisdiction apply to the judgment of any appellate Court other than a High Court. —S. 367—Applicability.*—Karachi Sessions Court.

The Judges of Judicial Commissioner's Court, sitting as Sessions Judges for the District of Karachi, should follow as closely as possible the provisions of S. 367 and S. 424. But the omission to do so cannot vitiate and nullify the whole proceeding before the Sessions Court. The clause "so far as may be practicable" that occurs in S. 424 would certainly bring the error within the scope of S. 537. (Kincaid, J. C. and Tyabji, A.J.C.) FAKIR BUX v. EMPEROR. 95 I. ## —S. 367—Oral evidence.

—Omission to refer.

All that S. 367 requires is that the point for determination should be stated, the decision thereon, and the reasons for the decision. It cannot be assumed that because the Magistrate has not referred to the oral evidence but has drawn inferences from documents and from probabilities, therefore he has not considered the evidence. Where he has given strong and legal reasons for his conclusion there is no reason to say that his judgment is defective. (Ross, J.) DURGA SINGH v. EMPEROR. 71 I. C. 597=24 Cr. L. J. 181= 2 Pat. L. ## —S. 367—Reasons.

Where a large number of persons has participated in a murder, in deciding as to whether some or all of them are to be sentenced to death after a conviction for murder it has long been settled that prima facie all the persons convicted should be sentenced to the extreme penalty and it is only where special circumstances are shown in favour of any individual that the Court would sentence such individual to the alternative punishment of transportation for life. ## —S. 367—Sentence of death.

Where the Sessions Judge passed a sentence of transportation for life on a youthful offender on the ground that he was young, that he may reform, and that the murder was committed without premeditation but otherwise it appeared that the murder was brutal and cold blooded,

Held, in appeal that the sentence of death should have been passed. (Raza and Pullan, J.J.) EMPEROR v. BHAGWANDIN. 7 O. W. N. 767= 1930 Cr. C. 965.

—When need not be passed.

Apparently the provision in S. 367 (5) contemplates that death sentence is to be passed as a matter of course unless there is sufficient reason to the contrary. But the Court must consider the question of sentence with reference to the circumstances and if these circumstances justify the passing of a sentence other than the sentence of death, the Court must pass that sentence. Therefore, in fixing the measure of punishment one is to be guided not by S. 367, but by various other matters, for instance, the enormity or otherwise of the offence and the particular circumstances under which the accused committed it.

D, a mere lad of twenty, went to retire with his wife and shut himself in the upper room. In the morning the door was found open and the girl was found murdered. D was found absconding and remained hiding for some six weeks.

Held, that on consideration of his age, good character, the provocation at the unsympathetic treatment he

Youth alone does not constitute such an extenuating circumstance as would justify the imposition on the lesser penalty prescribed by the law.

But where a youth charged under S. 302 had no personal enmity with the victim, and he was found to be only a tool in the hands of the enemies of the victims, —Doubt as to the cause of death.

If a person is convicted of an offence punishable with death, the fact that the accused murdered his victim merely to escape from custody, is not a sufficient reason for imposing the lesser sentence.

But where the case rested entirely on circumstantial evidence and it was open to question whether the injuries to the head would have caused death had not the deceased been drowned,

Held, there can be other reasons for inflicting the lesser punishment. (Wasir Hasan and Pullan, J.J.) EMPEROR v. MANNUN.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 367—Signing of Judgment.

—Voluntary drunkenness.

The reasons justifying the infliction of the lesser penalty under S. 367 (5) must be such as are in accord with established legal principles; unless drunkenness either amounts to unsoundness of mind so as to enable insanity to be pleaded by way of defence, or the degree of drunkenness is such as to establish incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime, drunkenness is neither a defence nor a palliation and is not a reason for inflicting a sentence of transportation for life instead of the death sentence. 28 P.R. —Accused a woman.

Mere absence of premeditation or deliberate intent to kill is not an adequate reason for not passing sentence of death, so also the fact that the accused is a woman is not a conclusive reason for not passing a sentence of death. (Young, Off. C. J. and May Oung, J.) MI SHE YI v. EMPEROR.

—S. 367—Signing of judgment.

—Bench Magistrates—Signing in Register of convictions.

The intention of S. 265 is that by whomsoever the judgment and record may have been written, they shall be signed by all the members present. The words "presiding officer of the Court" do not afford any assistance in the construction of S. 265 and do not show that the judgment may be signed only by the Chairman of the Benches; they are no more than a compendious description of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges who have to pronounce judgments. But the failure to comply with a mandatory provision of the Code is not necessarily an illegality and thus where all the members of the Bench sign the register, in which the sentences are embodied, and thus agree in the judgment, their omission to comply with the technical requirements of the law in the fact that the judgment is signed only by the Chairman is a mere irregularity which occasions no failure of justice. Where in a joint trial of several accused persons for various offences, some triable by jury and others triable with the aid of assessors, the Judge summed up the case at some length to the jury with regard to all the charges, but when he came to write his judgment with regard to the charges triable by himself with the assessors, he merely referred to the charge to the jury without giving any reasons for agreeing with the jury,

Under S. 367 the Judge is not to write a judgment but to record the heads of the charges to the jury, but as an appeal lies to the High Court in jury trials, it is necessary that the charge recorded should be such as to convey sufficient information to the High Court as to the explanation of the law by the Judge and about important questions of fact. —What the charge to jury should be.

According to the proviso to S. 367 (5) the recording of "heads of charge to the jury" need not be a verbatim reproduction of the Judge's summing up; nor is it necessary that the charge should be written out before it is delivered. But whether the heads of charge are written out before delivery or not, they should be placed on record by the Judge as soon as it is possible for him to do so and whilst what he said is fresh in his recollection.

The heads of charge need not be meticulous or lengthy but must give accurately the substance of what the Judge said to the jury so that the High Court may, if occasion arises, be able to ascertain from the record whether the law and the facts relative to the case were fairly and properly put to the jurors.

A judgment even of a High Court, when it is signed, becomes final, and it is not thereafter open to review. Where an appeal was disposed of by a Judge of the High Court but by mistake, the appeal filed through Counsel was not posted along with it and he was not consequently heard,

Held, that was no ground for re-hearing the appeal, as the appeal has been disposed of and the High Court has no power of Review and the judgment had become final. There is no rule in the Madras High Court similar to Rule 83 of Allahabad High Court as to the sealing of orders. The Judgment has become final when it was delivered and signed. A reasonable opportunity for the accused to be heard is an essential condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction under S. 439, when the Court is considering the question of enhancing the punishment inflicted on him. Where the conditions laid down by law as precedent and requisite to the hearing of a case are not observed, the Court acts without jurisdiction, and its order is, therefore, void ab initio and the case can be re-heard. The questions of misdirection are of less importance in a case of reference, for in a case of reference the High Court has to come to its own independent conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused person independently of the verdict of the jury or of the opinion of the Judge. —S. 374—Powers of High Court.

The powers of the High Court are not limited in the case of a reference as they are ordinarily limited in the case of an appeal from a trial held by a jury. It is open to the High Court to come to the conclusion that the finding of the jury is unsafe and unjustified by the evidence on the record. But it does not mean that the Court is, for that purpose, to deal with the case merely on the paper-book. The Judge and the jury have had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and watching the development of the case for the prosecution and the defence in all its various stages and the High Court will always attach the greatest possible weight to the conclusion of the jury. Where there is no proper trial.

No doubt the entire case is open to the High Court under S. 374, but that assumes that whatever has happened, before the case comes to the High Court, has been done in strict accordance with the provisions of the law. But if there has been no proper trial then the only course that is open to the High Court is to direct a re-trial. (C.C. Ghose and Graham, J.J.) EMPEROR v. RAJAB ALI FAKIR.

—S. 374—Principle.

Certainty of guilt—Distinction between Ss. 374 and 423.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 374—Principle.

If the evidence in a case affords such a degree of certainty of the guilt of the accused as is mentioned in S. 3 of the Evidence Act, the sentence must be based on the facts found proved by however little the proof of them exceeds the standard stated in that section; otherwise the accused must be acquitted. A Judge or Magistrate who says an accused person is proved guilty, but should be lightly punished because the proof of his guilt is weak, contradicts and stultifies himself. The sentence of death is not an exception to this principle either at the trial or in appeal. But the law naturally makes full provision for the undoubted fact that a capital sentence differs from all others in being irrevocable after it has been carried out, and if the matters to be considered under S. 423 are left out there is nothing left to be considered under S. 376 except the one matter whether the certainty of guilt is sufficiently in excess of the minimum certainty required by S. 3 of the Evidence Act to remove the danger of the carrying out of the sentence on an innocent person. —S. 374—Sentence when confirmed.*—Doubt as to identification.

Certain persons were tried with the aid of jury upon charges under S. 120-B read with Ss. 302 and 34 of the Penal Code. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty on both the charges and the Judge accepting and agreeing with the verdict sentenced the accused to death. There was no eye-witness to the occurrence, and there was a real doubt as to the identification of the accused. Inspiration and manipulation were apparent in the retracted confession of the accused. Murder was found to be the result of a severe struggle between the accused and the murdered.

Held, that verdict of jury was not justified under the circumstances. (Chotsner and Lort Williams, J.J.) PONCHU MONDAL v. EMPEROR.

As S. 236 does not contemplate a case in which the series of acts complained of may constitute more than one offence, therefore, S. 403 (1) has no application to a case where more than one offence has been committed by the same transaction (Courtney Terrell, C. J. and —Series of acts—Different offences.

Section 403 (2) limits or rather explains the common law rule as meaning that the acquittal or conviction for the offence constituted by acts A, B and C, will not bar a subsequent trial in respect of the offence constituted by the acts B, C and D. The offences are distinct and the evidence necessary in the first case is different from the evidence necessary in the second. This sub-section has no application to a case in which entire series of acts constituted both offences. (Courtney Terrell, C. J. and Rowland, J.) BABULAL MAHTON v. RAM SARAN SINGH. 117 I. —Refusal to file complaint under S. 476.

—Conviction and acquittal not in force.

Section 403 (1) forbids a retrial only where a person has been convicted or acquitted and such conviction or acquittal remains in force. When the conviction is set aside and is no longer in force and no acquittal also is in force, a retrial can be ordered. (Boys and Bennett, J.J.) AZAM ALI v. EMPEROR. 121 I. C. 248 = 31 Cr. L. —Facts different.

The principle of autre fois acquit is not applicable, when, though the section is the same in both trials, the facts on which the prosecution rests, are wholly and completely different.

The previous acquittal of an accused under S. 498, I. P. C. is no bar to subsequent proceedings on a charge of subsequent detention, as this cannot be said to be a case of a person being tried for the same offence. (Harrison, J.) WARYAM SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Where an accused was alleged to have gone with a number of others to a palmyra tope and it was alleged that some of the members in that assembly climbed up the trees and cut the spathes of the palmyra trees and threw down the pots attached to the spathes in which toddy was being collected and the accused was once charged with mischief under S. 427 of the Penal Code and acquitted on the ground that he was not present at the scene of occurrence, Held, he could not subsequently be charged with rioting under S. 147 of the Penal Code on the allegation that he along with the same body of people as on the former occasion went to the tope and that some of them destroyed the spathes in pursuance of the common object, viz., of committing mischief by destroying the spathes and breaking the pots because the two transactions were so closely overlapping that it was open to the prosecution to have framed an alternative charge of mischief and rioting under S. 236. Section 403 is not a section easy of construction but the general principle underlying it is to be borne in mind namely that a man should not be put upon his trial twice over on the same facts as it is a great hardship for a man to stand more than one trial for any one offence. Where an accused was alleged to have gone with a number of others to a palmyra tope and it was alleged that some of the members in that assembly climbed up the trees and cut the spathes of the palmyra trees and threw down the pots attached to the spathes in which toddy was being collected and the accused was once charged with mischief under S. 427 of the Penal Code and acquitted on the ground that he was not present at the scene of occurrence. Held, he could not subsequently be charged with rioting under S. 147 of the Penal Code on practically the same allegations because the two transactions were so closely overlapping that it was open to the prosecution to have framed an alternative charge of mischief and rioting under S. 236. Section 403 is not a section easy of construction but the general principle underlying it is to be borne in mind, namely, that a man should not be put upon his trial twice over on the same facts as it is a great hardship for a man to stand more than one trial for any one offence. The complainant submitted a petition to the District Magistrate who revived the complaint but directed that prosecution should proceed under S. 379, I. P. —Different complainants. A judgment-debtor escaped from the Amin who had arrested him. The decree-holder then lodged a complaint against him but he was acquitted. Thereupon the Amin lodged another complaint. Held, that the judgment-debtor's acquittal in the decree-holder's complaint is an effective bar against the subsequent complaint by the Amin under S. 403, A. —Composition. Composition has the effect of acquittal only as between the person who is entitled to compound on the one hand and the accused with whom the composition takes place on the other. —Acquittal—When can be passed. Under S. 247 it is not necessary that the summons should be served on the accused or that he should be present in the Court before an order of acquittal can be passed in his favour on account of the absence of the complainant. On the same facts a plea of autre fois acquit cannot be sustained for a different offence unless the requirements of S. 403 (1) are fulfilled. Conversely the plea of autre fois acquit in similar circumstances cannot be defeated except under sub-S. (2) of the same section. The key to sub-S. (2) lies in the words "distinct offence." By "distinct offence" is meant that it must be an offence entirely unconnected with a former offence charged. A general offence of theft is wholly not unconnected with an offence of extracting teak timber without a license. A was prosecuted under Burma Forest Act under R. 21 for extracting teak timber without a licence and under S. 61 for counterfeiting akauk mark upon teak timber stolen by him. He was acquitted of these charges. Subsequently, A was prosecuted on the same facts under Ss. 379 and 411, Penal Code. It was contended that A was entitled to set up a plea of autre fois acquit.

To set up the plea of autre fois acquit it is essential that there must have been a previous trial of the offence terminating in the order of acquittal. It must be established that the offences were substantially the same and grew out of same facts. Where the two indictments are essentially different and relate to separate and independent transactions affecting distinct individuals it cannot be held that acquittal with reference to complaint of the one is a bar to entertainment of the second complaint. It is not necessary that both complaints should be before the same person but before the presiding officer of the same Court. B and C instituted a joint complaint against H. Transactions out of which the complaints arose were different and independent, and separate complaints ought to have been presented. B and H compounded the case with the result that C's case was no longer subject of judicial inquiry. C filed a fresh complaint, H contended that he had been acquitted of all charges in the original complaint and no fresh complaint could be entertained under S. 403.

Held, that the effect of acquittal with reference to B's complaint was no bar to the entertainment of the complaint by C. No order for acquittal had been passed with reference to C's complaint and H was not ordered to be discharged on the same. 9 All. 52; (1895) A. W. N. 86; 5 A. L. Held, that the offence under S. 91-B, Companies Act,

CR. P. CODE (1898), S.403—Fresh trial not barred. had nothing to do with the alleged offence of criminal breach of trust of the Bank's funds. —Subsequent charge for which the original Magistrate cannot try.

While a Magistrate, with first class powers, was conducting a trial, the accused, suddenly stood up in Court, shouted "Jai Mahabir" and beat another person with a shoe. The accused thereby committed two offences under Penal Code, Ss. 228 and 355. The presiding Magistrate exercising his powers under S. 480, Cr. P. Code, punished him for the offence under S. 228, Penal Code. Thereafter the assaulted person filed a complaint in Sub-Divisional Officer's Court who convicted the accused under S. 355. In appeal and revision the accused pleaded bar of S. 403, Cr. P. Code.

Held, that the Magistrate had no cognizance of the offence under S. 355, Penal Code and therefore, in the absence of this condition precedent was incompetent to try the accused for it. There was not only one act of reckless driving, but a subsequent act of knocking against a man during such rash driving and, therefore, his conviction for rash driving cannot protect him from prosecution for the consequences of such rash driving under S. 325 or S. 338 I. —It is a fundamental common law rule that no one may be punished twice for the same offence and this has long been held to mean that he may not be punished twice for the same acts or omissions irrespective of the exact terms of the charge, and that the test of similarity is whether or not the evidence to obtain a legal conviction on the first charge was in substance the same as that necessary to sustain the second charge. —Though there is no absolute bar to an accused person being put in peril of a fresh trial in respect of the same offence in a case where the first trial has ended in an order of discharge, it is a well recognized and salutary rule of law, that a Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not entertain a fresh complaint in respect of the same offence when it is based on facts which were known to the complainant and on evidence which was available when the first trial was held, merely on the ground that he had no proper hearing on his previous complaint. In an appeal by Government against an acquittal the accused starts with a double presumption in his favour. Firstly, there is the rule that it is for the prosecution to make out their case and that until they do so beyond all reasonable doubt the accused must be presumed to be innocent and secondly that the accused having succeeded in securing an acquittal from a Court, a superior Court will not interfere until the Crown shows conclusively that the inference of guilt is irresistible. Appeal by Government—Acquittal on the ground of giving benefit of doubt—Onus is heavy to succeed in appeal.

An appeal by Government must be considered on its merits just as any other appeal always must be. The onus is on the appellant and this onus is all the heavier if the judgment appealed from is one which approaches the consideration of the question from a correct point of view and gives the accused the benefit of a reasonable doubt which exists in the mind of the Judge. ## —S. 417—Evidence.

As to appreciation of evidence there is no difference between an appeal from conviction and an appeal from acquittal. The Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction. In an appeal from an acquittal if the Court thinks the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence it has no jurisdiction to refuse to convict. The power of appeal under S. 417 is one that should be exercised sparingly by Government. But the discretion to exercise the right to appeal appertains to Government and is not subject to the control of the Court. 20 All. 459; 19 Bom. 51; 17 Cal. 485; 38 Mad. 1028 Foll. 4 All. 148, 16 All. 212, Dist. ## —S. 417—Grounds for interference.

Appeal from acquittal by lower appellate Court—High Court can interfere to set it aside.

Whatever may be the value of the judgment of a trial Court, which has had the opportunity of seeing the witnesses and observing their demeanour, no such reason can apply where the trial Court convicts the accused and it is the appellate Court which acquits. In such case the High Court is in a better position to weigh the evidence as the lower appellate Court —Appeal against acquittal when can interfere.

An appeal on behalf of Government in the exercise of the powers conferred by S. 417 should not be entertained when the judgment appealed from is based upon facts and the conclusions of the Court are such as may reasonably be arrived at upon the facts found. Where, therefore, the High Court cannot say that there were not some grounds which might justify the acquittal of the respondent and that the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is perverse or one which no reasonable man could have come to on the facts, it should not interfere with that judgment even if it comes to the conclusion that upon the evidence the prosecution case was sufficiently strong to justify a conviction. 16 All. 212 and 16 Cr. In order to justify interference with a judgment of acquittal on a question of fact, it is sufficient if the finding is clearly wrong on the evidence and unreasonable in the opinion of the appellate Court, whether or not the unreasonableness amounts to perversity, stupidity or incompetence, or the Court below can be said to have obstinately blundered in coming to it, but upon sound principles of criminal jurisprudence the indications of error in the judgment of acquittal ought to be clearer and more palpable and the evidence more cogent and convincing in order to justify its being set aside than would be necessary in the case of a judgment of conviction. 7 P. In an appeal from an acquittal, as in the case of an appeal from a conviction the appellant is entitled to go into facts and ask the appellate Court to take a view of the facts different from that taken by the trial Court. But the accused in an appeal from an acquittal retains his right of being presumed to be innocent until the charge is fully brought home to him. He has the right which he had in the trial Court of being given the benefit of a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. He must also have the benefit of the opinion of the trial Court upon the credibility of the witnesses whom that Court had the advantage of seeing face to face and judging of their demeanour and he has a right to ask that the acquittal should not be set aside unless the trial Court has taken a perverse view of the evidence and has arrived at an unnatural and distorted conclusion. 4 All. 148; 18 C. If in the case of a breach of trust where proof of abetment differs from proof of substantive offence in material particulars, if the attention of the accused is not directed at the time of framing the charges or during the trial to the fact that he might have to meet a charge of abetment, it would be highly unfair for the High Court on appeal to alter the conviction to one of abetment. —Charge and conviction under S. 379, Penal Code—Alteration to conviction under S. 143, Indian Penal Code by appellate Court—Accused is prejudiced.

If the prosecution establishes certain acts constituting an offence and the Court misapplies the law by charging and convicting an accused person for an offence other than that for which he should have been properly charged, and if notwithstanding such error the accused by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of these acts, then the appellate Court may alter the charge or finding and convict him for an offence which those acts properly constitute, provided the accused be not prejudiced by the alteration in the finding. Such an error is one of form rather than of substance. But where the accused is charged under S. 379, Indian Penal Code, and the appellate Court alters the conviction to one under S. 143, Indian Penal Code, the accused is prejudiced. 26 Cal. 363, Rel. on. —Alteration of sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment to one month and fine of Rs. 60 and in default two months is not enhancement.

The accused was convicted and sentenced to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment. He appealed and his conviction was affirmed but the sentence was altered into one of one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 60 with a further two months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment.

Held, that the appellate Court in effect reduced the sentence, the proper test being whether the accused really considers the fine as heavier sentence than imprisonment. 23 Bom. 439, Rel. on; A. I. —Appeal from conviction under S. 376, Penal Code—Appellate Court framing a charge under S. 366 holding that S. 376 had no application and trying the case itself—Proceedings are beyond the scope of S. 423.

The trial Court had convicted the accused under S. 376 for rape. On appeal by the accused the Sessions Court held that the charge of rape had no application by reason of the fact that the girl was over twelve and that the act could not be said to have been without her consent or against her will and therefore proceeded to frame a fresh charge under S. 366 against the appellant, of kidnapping a woman that she might be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. To this charge he called on the appellant to plead, and examined him upon it and allowed him to call one witness in defence.

Held, that in so trying the case himself the Sessions Judge exceeded the powers conferred on an Appellate Court by S. 423. A charge under S. 366 is triable by a Court of Sessions only under S. 193 only on commitment; therefore the Sessions Judge should, after setting aside the conviction, have ordered the accused to be committed for trial, when he would have been tried before a Court of Sessions with the aid of assessors. ## —S. 423—Revision.

—Appellate Court altering conviction into one for graver offence—Judicial Commissioner's Court can enhance sentence in revision.

Where the finding for lesser offences has been altered into a finding for a graver offence by appellate Court, it is within the power of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, sitting as a Court of revision, to pass a sentence which will be a legal one in view of the conviction for graver offence. S. 439, sub-S. (4) refers only to cases where there has been a complete acquittal. (Findlay, O.J.C. and Halifax, A.J.C.) LOCAL GOVERNMENT v. DAMA KUNBI. 27 Cr. L. J. 339 = 92 I. C. 851 = A. I. —Although it is desirable that the record of heads of charges should indicate far more fully than mere enumeration of the numbers of the sections, in order to entitle the High Court to interfere with the verdict of the jury and set it aside, it must be affirmatively proved that there has been misdirection and misunderstanding and the verdict is erroneous owing to misdirection by Judge and misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him. —Trial by jury—Appellate Court having all materials before it can deal the case itself—It is not necessary to send it for retrial.

There is nothing in the language of the Code to differentiate the way in which the powers of the appellate Courts are to be exercised, according as it is a jury trial or not. The language is wide enough to enable the Court to deal with the matter itself on an appeal even in a jury trial. No doubt the action which the appellate Court should take depends upon the circumstances of the particular case but when all the materials are before the appellate Court and the case has been prolonged for nearly two years and the verdict of the jury is erroneous owing to the misdirection by the presiding Judge it is in the interests of justice that the appellate Court should deal with the matter itself. 21 Cal. 955 and 25 Cal. 230, Ref.; 25 Cal. 711, Rel. on. —Jury not properly constituted—Ground not taken in appeal—Powers of High Court.

The jury which was empanelled to try a person was not constituted in the manner provided by law, i.e., in accordance with principles laid down in A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 83 (F.B.). This fact was not, however, made a ground in the appeal.

—Jury trial and trial with assessors—Considerations.

The considerations governing the appeal from the trial held with the aid of assessors differ greatly from those governing an appeal from the trial by a jury. In the latter case the appeal is restricted by the provisions of Ss. 423 (2) and 537, Cr. P. Code, whereas in the former case the whole case is before the appellate Court. —Jury accurately directed in matters of law—High Court will not interfere with verdict.

High Court as an appellate Court will not interfere with a verdict, whether it is a verdict of acquittal or conviction, if it is a verdict which could be reasonably arrived at by honest men, and they had been guided by an accurate direction in matters of law. Where the accused are charged for robbery with murder under circumstances that the murder and robbery have been committed by the same persons and constitute one offence, the appellate Court must consider the case of murder separately and if there is any reasonable doubt, it must give the benefit of doubt to the accused. —Charge to jury fair and accurate—Jury's verdict reasonable—Conviction is proper.

Where a Judge complied with all the requisitions of the law, i.e., where he stated the law correctly and placed the case before the jury both as it stood against as well as in favour of the prisoners, and left the jury to decide upon evidence which was admissible and relevant and where the jury arrived at a verdict which was very reasonable.

Held, that there was no justification for interfering with the conviction based upon such verdict. (Stuart, C.J.) BABBAN v. EMPEROR. 105 I.C. 457=4 O.W.N. 901=28 Cr. L. J. 937=A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 549.

—Provisions are imperative—No misdirection to jury—Verdict cannot be altered.

The terms of S. 423 (2) are imperative and where there is no misdirection by the Sessions Judge it is no competent to the High Court to alter or reverse the verdict of the jury. In such a case where the High Court was of opinion that the accused should have been acquitted and that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence they directed a copy of the judgment to be sent to the local Government for necessary action. —No interference by High Court unless the omission by Judge to read some portion of evidence to jury has prejudiced the accused.

An objection that in delivering his charge to the jury, the Sessions Judge did not read material portions of the evidence is not itself sufficient for the reversal of the verdict of the jury. In each case it must be a question whether the omission to read the material portion of the evidence was such as to mislead the jury and the Court of appeal will not interfere, if it has not prejudiced the accused. —Distinction between matters to be considered under Ss. 374 and 423 pointed out.

If the evidence in a case affords such a degree of certainty of the guilt of the accused as is mentioned in S. 3 of Evidence Act, the sentence must be based on the facts found proved by however little the proof of them exceeds the standard stated in that section; otherwise the accused must be acquitted. A Judge or Magistrate who says an accused person is proved guilty but should be lightly punished because the proof of his guilt is weak, contradicts and stultifies himself. The sentence of death is not an exception to this principle either at the trial or in appeal. But the law naturally makes full provision for the undoubted fact that a capital sentence differs from all others in being irrevocable after it has been carried out, and if the matters to be considered under S. 423 are left out, there is nothing left to be considered under S. 376 except the one matter whether the certainty of guilt is sufficiently in excess of the minimum certainty required by S. 3 of the Evidence Act to remove the danger of the carrying out of the sentence on an innocent person. If a rule is recognised under the English Law which is not a mere rule of practice and procedure but as embodying a principle of natural or substantial justice, and there is nothing in the C.P. Code militating against its application in India, the powers conferred by S. 423, Cr. P. Code, would be large enough to invoke its application. (Suhrawardy and Mukerji, J.J.) I. G. SINGLETON v. —The Judges of Judicial Commissioner's Court, sitting as Sessions Judges for the District of Karachi, should follow as closely as possible the provisions of S. 367 and S. 424. There must be sufficient material in the appellate judgment itself to show that the appeal has been properly tried. The judgment or order must bear marks of such intelligent appreciation on the part of the appellate Court, of the necessary facts and materials as would warrant the High Court to infer that the conclusions were properly arrived at by the lower appellate Court. S. 342 does not apply to evidence taken under S. 428. In itself S. 342 applies only to case of original trial. There may be cases where the accused can properly be questioned by the Magistrate in regard to additional evidence taken by him under the directions of the appellate Court but if he does not do so there is no omission of anything required by law. —S. 342 does not apply to S. 428 (1)—Per Bucknill, J.—Fresh opportunity to accused to make statement may be essential in some cases.

In S. 428 of the Code there is no provision that the accused should be examined after the prosecution evidence is taken and as the examination of witnesses after remand may be made even in the absence of the accused the provisions of S. 342 do not apply to it.

Per Bucknill, J.—The Code itself does not contemplate or provide for the examination of the accused after fresh evidence is taken for the prosecution on remand. However, no hard and fast rule can be laid down with regard to when the provisions of S. 342 are and are not properly complied with; in conceivable cases where fresh evidence on a remand has been taken the applicant ought to be given an opportunity of making a statement, i.e., in effect of being examined by the Magistrate; but provided the accused has in fact had a reasonable and substantial opportunity of exercising the privilege accorded to him by the provisions of S. 342, that is of either orally or in writing saying what he wishes to say in explanation of what has been alleged against him, a technical failure or omission in the procedure ought not to be regarded as rendering a trial wholly nugatory. Should such omission or failure be shown to have prejudiced the accused the matter assumes a different aspect and should be remedied, but not otherwise. Intention of the Legislature was to empower an appellate Court to see that justice is done between the prosecutor and the person prosecuted, and if the appellate Court finds that certain evidence is necessary in order to enable it to give a correct finding, it would be justified in taking action under this section and allow prosecution to give further evidence. In cases of murder or of a man-slaughter it is unreasonable to expect the jury to convict if a proper exposition and explanation of the medical evidence is not given viva voce by a doctor who can deal with the matter and satisfy the jury. The jury are quite entitled to be fully satisfied. Until one has gleaned all the facts that one can get from the medical reports, one is not really in a position to say what part of other evidence can be relied upon. Where the medical evidence

Order of remand for taking additional evidence must include the setting aside of conviction by the lower Court.

Code, was upheld, and the appellate Court directed the lower Court to examine all the accused under S. 342, Code of Criminal Procedure and call upon them to adduce any defence evidence if any, and re-submit the record to the appellate Court.

Held, that the Judge should have set aside the convictions and sentences and remanded the case to the first Court for that Court to deal with the case on its merits as if it were before that Court for the first time. The Judge's procedure was clearly erroneous. (Walmsley and Mukerji, J.J.) MAHOMED ABDUL SAMAD v. EMPEROR. 84 I. C. 457=40 C. L. J. 319=26 Cr. L. J. 313=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 172.

—S. 428—Revision.

Order allowing additional evidence will not be interfered with in revision except in case of error of law affecting merits of the case.

The Court of Revision will not interfere with an order of the appellate Court allowing additional evidence even where it might itself in the exercise of its discretion as the Appellate Court, have declined to admit additional evidence. To justify interference in revision the Court must be satisfied that the Appellate Court committed an error of law which has prejudiced the accused on the merits. (Macpherson, J.) AKHTAR HUSSAIN v. —S. 428—Scope and object.

The scope of S. 428 is prima facie not limited by any consideration save that the Appellate Court should be of opinion that additional evidence is necessary and should record its reasons. The object of the section is just as much the prevention of the escape of a guilty person through some carelessness or ignorant procedure of the Court, Sub-Inspector or the Magistrate as the vindication of the innocence of a person wrongfully accused where the same carelessness or ignorance has omitted to bring on the record circumstances essential to the elucidation of truth. It is impossible on the plain words of the enactment to differentiate between these two cases. It would not be a sound exercise of discretion to do so in the circumstances of India, where justice when it fails does so by erroneous acquittal at least as much as by erroneous conviction. In India the onus is placed on the Court not merely to listen to the evidence, but to inquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter, and so to secure justice. Accordingly if any restriction is to be placed upon the power conferred on the Appellate Court by S. 428, it certainly cannot be that negligence or inadvertence on the part of the prosecution is to be allowed to effect a miscarriage of justice: on the contrary, the enactment is, like the other provisions referred to, directed to the attainment of justice even at a late stage in the proceedings, by the introduction of further materials which the Court judges to be essential to a just decision of the case. But the Court, in considering whether to interfere or not, is bound to have regard to the fact that its interference may not work injustice to accused upon the ground of prosecution and want of finality, and, in the event of its coming to a conclusion that the proceedings were taken with a view to furthering either of these objects to the exclusion of other matters proper for it to consider, the High Court would refuse such an application. 2 Mad.

The words legality and propriety in S. 435 would both include questions of law as to whether a finding, sentence or order is legal or proper having regard to the evidence. The word, correctness, does not mean that the High Court may inquire whether the finding was acceptable to it on a balance of the evidence recorded in the trial Court. The correctness of the finding, sentence or order also implies a legal defence such as the finding being based on an entire want of evidence or being incorrect in the sense that witness may have said for instance, that no theft was committed and the Court may have recorded a finding that theft was committed. The jurisdiction of the High Court to revise an order of acquittal and direct a re-trial should be exercised only in exceptional cases and with caution. It is the bounden duty of the revisional authority to record its reasons for setting aside the order of discharge, and to show how the order of discharge was improper. Such revisional jurisdiction cannot be said to have been properly exercised without having and assigning solid and sufficient reasons for doing so. The object of this rule is that the High Court in the absence of such reasons cannot exercise supervision over the Magistrates, or Judges' proceedings, and also because it is fair to the person whose liberty is going to be affected by such order, that he should have notice of the grounds on which the further enquiry is going to be made. 32 Cal. 1090; 8 C. —Further enquiry after discharge—Accused has no right to appear—Magistrate allowing him to appear is illegality which cannot entitle him to appear at every subsequent stage.

When the order is passed, after an order under S. 203, directing further enquiry, the accused has no right under the law to appear either before the trial Court or before the revision Court. And if the Magistrate allowed the accused to appear before the trial Court to cross-examine the witnesses he acted illegally and this illegal act of the Magistrate does not create a right in the accused to appear as every stage of the proceeding. 21 C. It is not sufficient for a Court to merely say that the trial Judge has not gone fully into the case and to declare that a further enquiry is necessary. Before ordering a further enquiry the Court of Revision should state in what respect the trial Judge's conclusions are either foolish or perverse or otherwise unsatisfactory, and if the case is sent back on the ground that the decision of the trial Court has been arrived at upon an incomplete record this should be stated. 10 P. Section 436 does not lay down any rule that further inquiry should only be directed when it is found that the judgment is perverse or foolish.

The effect of an order dismissing a complaint under S. 203 is to restore the case to the stage under S. 202 and the further inquiry directed should be taken up from that point. 4 P.L.J. 456 and 5 P.L.J. 47, Ref. to. (Jwala Prasad, J.) RADHA PRASAD v. EMPEROR.

committed offences under Ss. 323, 347 and 358, Penal Code. The complaint was dismissed under S. 203, Cr. P. Code. Whereupon the Deputy Superintendent of Police filed a petition of complaint against M under S. 192, Cr. P. Code. M moved the Deputy Commissioner for reference to High Court alleging that the proceedings against them could not be taken except on complaint by the Court. The reference was made and the proceedings quashed by the High Court. The Deputy Superintendent of Police thereupon petitioned to the Deputy Commissioner alleging that the complaint of M was serious and that the order of the Magistrate was vague and prayed for further enquiry. Proceeding under S. 436, the Deputy Commissioner directed further enquiry into the complaint in order to give opportunity to the accused to vindicate themselves and to prove that the allegations made against them were not only open to doubt but false. Sub-Divisional Officer directed to make further enquiries, at once issued processes against the police officer under Ss. 323 and 347 and preferred charges under Ss. 323 and 347. The case was then transferred to Deputy Magistrate who recorded the evidence of some witnesses for prosecution and committed the accused to Sessions under S. 388, Penal Code.

Held, (i) that the Magistrate had discretion to issue the process against the accused and after hearing the evidence, to commit the accused to the Sessions and had discretion to dispense with any preliminary enquiry under S. 202 and that the procedure involved in hearing the evidence and committing the accused for trial was further enquiry under S. 436 and within the scope of the order. 32 Mad. 220 (F. persons who were charged before him under Ss. 424 and 506 (2) of the Penal Code. The complainant afterwards made several applications to the Magistrate to frame a charge against the accused under S. 395 of the Penal Code and commit the accused to Sessions. The Magistrate recorded the applications but declined to entertain them. Upon this the Dt. Magistrate was moved by the complainant and acting under S. 437 of the Cr. P. Code, framed at charge against the accused and committed them to take their trial before the Sessions Court. It was contended in revision that the District Magistrate's order was illegal because the accused had been acquitted and not discharged.

Held, that the First Class Magistrate's order was substantially one discharging the accused in respect of an alleged offence under S. 395 of the Penal Code and that the Dt. Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order in question. (Kincaid and Aston, A. J. Cs.)

Where, therefore, the accused, charged under Penal Code, Ss. 457 and 380, have been discharged by the trying Magistrate under Cr. P. C., S. 209, the Sessions Judge, acting under S. 437 cannot pass an order against the accused directing that the order of discharge be set aside and that the trying Magistrate do commit the accused to take their trial at the Sessions. —Powers of High Court.

The High Court has power to interfere with orders of acquittal but it will interfere only where exercise of the jurisdiction is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. An order of acquittal was allowed to stand, where the dispute was essentially one of civil nature, both accused and complainant claiming ownership of the property in respect of which the crime was alleged to have been committed. —Acquittal can be revised, but only in exceptional cases—Grave error of procedure justifies revision but improper admission of evidence not essential to the result, does not.

The final report in the diary of an investigating officer not called as a witness for the prosecution might be used to suggest means of further elucidating a point which needs clearing up, but only for elucidating by legal evidence. But using the final report for the purpose of evidence is a legal error. Such error cannot, however, justify interference by the High Court, for setting aside an acquittal. An error of procedure of a grave character would justify interference by the High Court but not a mere error of improper admission of evidence which was not essential to a result which might have been come to independently of it. 44 Cal. 876, Foll. —Order of acquittal on compromise in a non-compoundable offence—Revision lies.

As a rule an interference is not made in revision with an order of acquittal on the application of a private party except where such interference is imperatively demanded in the interests of public justice or where the procedure adopted is so irregular or illegal as to vitiate the whole trial. Where there was a patent error or irregularity in the order passed by the trying Magistrate in that the offence of which the accused was charged and acquitted on a compromise being filed, was not compoundable.

—Modes of.

An improper order of acquittal can be set aside by the High Court either on a regular appeal by the Local Government when ordinarily moved by the District Magistrate or in revision ordinarily on a reference by the Sessions Judge. Where the first alternative is not available, there can be no legal bar to the adoption of the second alternative. —Limitation.

The only limitation to the exercise of the right to apply for revision is that, under sub-S. (4) to S. 435 applications for revision cannot be made both to the Sessions Judge and to the District Magistrate. Also a petitioner would in practice be required to state all his grounds for revision in a single petition. With these exceptions there is nothing in the Code to make the disposal of one criminal revision case a bar to the disposal of another arising out of the same original trial. It is only when there has been an actual adjudication upon a particular point, such as the jurisdiction of the lower Court to try the accused or the adequacy of the sentence, that the High Court will not review its own decision. Hence, where an accused's revision petition from his conviction has been dismissed, the complainant can apply for enhancing sentence.

Per Wallace, J.—No Court can reasonably accept the principle that once it has passed any sort of order in criminal revision, it is precluded from entertaining any further revision petition or reference in the same case, or even from proceeding suo motu. When a Court has refused to allow as adequate certain reasons put forward by a party for interference in revision, it cannot be said to have thereby endorsed the correctness, legality and propriety of the finding, sentence or order under revision beyond all further possibility of question. The Court would no doubt refuse to listen to a fresh revision petition put in by a party who had already put in a revision petition and obtained orders thereon, on the salutary principle that a party must put forward all his grounds of attack at once. hanced,

Held, (per Mukerji, J.)—The plea of "guilty" is a plea to the charge and does not necessarily amount to a confession of all the facts alleged. The Court is not bound to, but it may convict the accused on his plea: vide, S. 271 (2), Cr. P. Code. The plea operates as a bar in certain cases, to the preferring of an appeal except as to the extent and legality of the sentence: vide S. 412, Cr. P. Code. A plea of guilty will perhaps also stand in the accused's way in the matter of a revision which he may seek for. But when called upon to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, the accused has the right to show cause against his conviction. S. 439 (6), Cr. P. Code, does not make any exception as regards the case of a person who has been convicted on his own plea. Uncross-examined testimony of the prosecution witnesses given in the Court of the Committing Magistrate can hardly be taken to suffice for the purpose of enhancing punishment.

Per Graham, J.—The only circumstance in which it would be open to an accused to go behind the plea and re-open the matter of his conviction would be where he could show that there was some mistake in recording the plea, and that he did not in fact plead "guilty". In view of S. 412 it cannot be held that an accused who has pleaded guilty is entitled under sub-S. (6), S. 439 to "show cause against his conviction." Those words are applicable only where the accused has been convicted on the evidence, and in that case and that case only he is entitled to show that the conviction is wrong either upon the facts or through some error of law.

Per Buckland, J.—The accused cannot go behind his plea of "guilty" as a confession of the facts charged, nor is he entitled to withdraw his plea. (Buckland, J. on difference between Mukerji and Graham, J.J.) Supt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. JANENDRA NATH. 49 C. L. J. 432=

—S. 439—Enhancement of sentence—Meaning of.

—Enhancement of punishment means that the sentence originally passed is to be vacated and a new and a proper sentence is to be passed. It cannot be that a second sentence in addition to the original one is to be passed, because for one offence the law can punish the accused but once. —S. 439—Enhancement of sentence—Principles of.

—High Court may enhance sentence even contrary to the opinion of the District authorities.

Ordinarily the High Court should be loath to take action in the matter of enhancement of punishment when the District authorities consider the sentence as sufficient; but there are occasions when the High Court has every right to enforce its own opinion which may be a contrary opinion to that of the District authorities. (Stuart and Ryves, J.J.) WAZIR v. SARJU BHAR. 30 Cr. L. J. 222=A. I. R. 1928 All. 417.

—The High Court will not ordinarily enhance the sentence merely on the ground that if it were seised of the trial of the accused, it would have awarded a longer sentence of imprisonment than that awarded by the Magistrate, but it will interfere only where the sentence awarded by the trial Court is grossly inadequate. 7 P. R. 1889, Cr.; 9 A. I. Cr. R. 504; and A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 926, Ref. (Jai Lal, J.) EMPEROR v. DHANA LAL. 110 I. C. 796=11 A. I. Cr. R. 15=29 Cr. L. J. 764=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 551.

—Enhancement of sentence is a very serious proceeding, and where there is a proposal to that effect it must be supported by the Government Pleader under instructions which would enable him to put before the High Court cogent reasons why there should be an enhancement of the sentence. The matter should be submitted to the trying Court where the prosecuting authorities think that the sentence ought to be deterrent. They cannot merely trust exclusively to the powers of the High Court of correcting sentences of the lower Courts where the sentences ought to be deterrent. 16 Bom. L. R. 202 and 203, Foll. —Although a High Court has power under S. 439, Cr. P. Code to enhance the sentence awarded by the lower Court, yet it will not ordinarily exercise its exceptional revisional powers in the direction of enhancing sentences, unless the sentences are manifestly inadequate. The mere ground that the High Court would itself have passed a heavier sentence, or that it would have maintained a heavier sentence is not enough to enhance the sentence. 7 P. R. 1889 Cr. Foll. (Simpson and Gokaran Nath Misra, A. J. C.) SITARAM v. EMPEROR.

—Sentence cannot be enhanced except on very serious grounds.

It is perfectly impossible for the High Court to do the duty of all the Sessions Courts subordinate to it and it is primarily the business of the Police and the prosecuting agency to see that the Sessions Court trying the case in the original does its duty. It is very difficult for the Crown successfully to press for enhancement when their representative in the Sessions Court appears to have allowed the Sessions Court to pass the sentence, it did, without any serious attempt to modify it. —Although the High Court has power to interfere in revision with an inadequate sentence it does not ordinarily interfere merely because, it would itself have passed a heavier sentence so long as the sentence passed involves substantial punishment. (Heald, J.) EMPEROR v. BEJAI. 3 Bur. L. J. 155=17 S. L. R. 268=26 Cr. L. J. 177=A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 373.

—S. 439—Enhancement of sentence—Private complaint.

—Where a person was convicted on a plea of guilty and on a rule being issued for enhancement of sentence on the application of the complainant, the Crown did not appear to support it.

Held, that in such a case the rule should ordinarily be discharged unless it is clear beyond doubt that it should be made absolute. The Court of revision is slow to interfere, where interference involves the imprisonment of a person already discharged from jail, but that circumstance alone cannot be allowed to operate as an insuperable obstacle to the enhancement of a sentence. It is an elementary duty of a Judge in a criminal case to exclude evidence which is not legally admissible. A Magistrate should not in his judgment in a criminal case make observations prejudicial to the character of a person who is neither a party nor a witness in the proceedings on materials which are not legally admissible as evidence. Even if the evidence is legally admissible, the Magistrate has no right to make such observations against a person without giving him an opportunity to be heard. It would be an abuse of judicial privilege for a Magistrate to pass strictures on third persons like this. It would be a denial of justice to allow such reflections upon the character of a person to stand and the High Court should order the expungement of the objectionable passages from the judgment. —Remarks by appellate Court doubting correctness of Trial Court's acquittal of an accused when no appeal was made from such acquittal.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 439—Expunging remarks.

The High Court in revision will not permit the continuance on record of the expressions of a lower Appellate Court tending to show its opinion that an accused though acquitted by Trial Court and in spite of the absence of appeal from the Trial Court's acquittal, was really guilty. The reason is that a person must be deemed to be innocent of the charge made against him once he is acquitted of the offence in regular course of law and there has not been any appeal made to a superior tribunal. Therefore it is not proper for an appellate Court when disposing of an appeal of one of two co-accused who were tried together and one of whom was discharged to employ expressions which amount to a finding that the acquittal of the accused in question was wrong. In criminal revisions it is not, generally speaking, within the High Court's function to go behind findings of fact to support which there is evidence on record. In regard to the grounds of law the High Court does not interfere with an error or omission or irregularity unless the same has caused failure of justice; and as regards questions of facts, though the Court's jurisdiction to interfere in respect of the correctness of findings of facts is unquestionable, it will not as a rule go into the evidence save in exceptional cases as where judgment of the facts is manifestly wrong and grossly and palpably unjust. Findings of fact if perverse or contrary to law can be upset.

In the ordinary course of things findings of facts are accepted by a revisional Court as binding upon it but revision would be an idle farce if the revisional Court had not the power which has been exercised 100, possibly 1000 times throughout the High Courts in India to look into the evidence for itself and see if these findings can be justified by what appears upon the record. A revisional Court does not decide the balance of credibility between two conflicting sets of witnesses or two conflicting issues of fact but it may be compelled to dissent from a finding of fact which is either perverse or has been arrived at contrary to well-established principles of law. —Going into facts for finding out miscarriage of justice is within the power.

The High Court is competent to enter into a discussion of evidence and can go into facts to find out if there has been a miscarriage of justice. The controlling power of the court is a discretionary power and it must be exercised with reference to all the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said circumstances which vary greatly. This discretion ought not to be crystallised as it would become, in course of time, by one judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to bind other judges in the exercise of the discretion which the legislature has committed to them. This discretion, like other judicial discretions, ought as far as possible, to be left untrammelled and free so as to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case. 28 Bom. 533; 42 I. —No time limit is placed on High Court's power of revision.

Art. 181 has no application to an application made to High Court in revision of an order of a Criminal Court of inferior jurisdiction. It does not appear that the Legislature ever intended that there should be a time limit placed upon the power of the High Court to interfere by way of revision in a criminal case. There is no reason also why the same principle should not be applied to Civil Revisions. These powers are exercised by High Court quite irrespective of any right on the part of the aggrieved party to move the Court. 43 Cal. 1029, Ref. (Pullan, J.) SHAH NIAM ATA v. EMPEROR.

When an application for revision has been made after the expiry of the period allowed for an appeal it is proper that the Court should ask the applicant to give reasons for the delay and if those reasons are not sufficient to dismiss the application. —Exceptional cases—Test for determining.

The High Court does not interfere in a case pending in a subordinate Court unless it is of an exceptional nature. One test of its being of exceptional nature is that a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince the High Court that the case is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage. Where in a proceeding under S. 488, Cr. P. Code by a wife against her husband the trial Magistrate passed an order that certain letters from his wife produced by the husband were inadmissible under S. 122 Evidence Act, the case was forwarded to High Court for setting aside the order.

—High Court would interfere where bare statement of the facts of the case justifies interference.

The circumstances which will justify the interference of the High Court in a pending case cannot be laid down with precision. But one safe practical test would be that a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince the High Court that it is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage. 25 Cal. 233 and 47 Mad. 722, Ref. to. —High Court can interfere in proceedings for granting bail.

Proceedings in which it is or it has been determined whether bail from the accused person should be taken or not come within the definition of "any proceeding" under S. 439 and the High Court can under that section interfere and control the propriety as well as the regularity of such proceedings. —High Court—When interferes.

Although the High Court would not interfere much with the discretion of the Magistrates who are vested with ample powers to dispose of a case before it has proceeded to its due termination, it would so interfere on occasions where the circumstances clearly call for its interference. Courts should look with much suspicion on criminal actions which are brought forward by partners of a still subsisting partnership against one another, so as to make a prosecution an extremely oppressive mechanism for compelling a partner to admit or pay up a claim or enter into some compromise in a matter which is really one, more suitable for settlement in a civil suit than a case for a criminal prosecution. The Court is, in particular, slow to interfere where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from jail, though this circumstance is no insuperable obstacle. Again the Court frequently declines to interfere, in order to enhance a sentence, on the mere ground that it would itself have passed a heavier sentence, contenting itself with pointing out that the sentence, is so far light that a heavier sentence would have been maintained. 7 P. —Court ordinarily confines itself to points raised in the revision petition.

Ordinarily a Judge disposing of a revision petition filed by a convicted person or his pleader against the propriety of his conviction cannot be said to be adjudicating on the question of enhancing the sentence. A Court exercising its revisional powers upon a revision petition ordinarily deals with the points raised in the petition and has no occasion to travel outside them and consider the whole case upon its merits, as the Court that tries the accused and the Court that hears the appeal, if any, does. It might be otherwise in a revision case taken up by the Court suo motu. (Spencer and Wallace, J.J.) ANIF SAHIB, In re. 85 I. C. 727=26 Cr. L. J. 583=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 993.

—S. 439—Private complaint.

—Per Mullick, J.—The power of interference in revision should be most sparingly exercised and only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, e.g., cases in which there has been a denial of the right of fair trial and which attract the operation of S. 107 of the Government of India Act. In cognizable cases the private prosecutor has no position at all and that if the Crown decides to let an offender go, no other aggrieved party can be heard to object that he has not taken his full toll of private vengeance. The Crown and not the complainant is always the party.

Per Macpherson, J.—The High Court possesses the power to set aside an acquittal under S. 439 on being moved by a private person, and this power is not restricted to cases where there has been no trial, or where there has been a denial of the right of fair trial. It cannot be laid down that in every case of a prosecution for a cognizable offence the private prosecutor in India has no position at all in the litigation. Neither principle nor authority supports the view that an application under S. 439 against an acquittal is not maintainable in a private prosecution where the offence charged is cognizable. (Mullick and Macpherson, J.J.) SIBAN RAI v. BHAGWANT DAS. 92 I. C. 219=5 Pat. 25=6 P. L. T. 833=27 Cr. L. J. 235=A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 176.

—Private complainant cannot move High Court to enhance sentence.

A private party cannot apply to the High Court for enhancing a sentence passed by a Subordinate Court. A District Magistrate, a Sessions Judge, or the Government Pleader, may draw the attention of the High Court to a sentence with a view to its being enhanced; or the High Court can of its own motion send for the record and take action with a like object. If a private complainant considers a sentence unduly lenient, he may draw the attention of Government to the fact. (Macleod, C. J. and Shah, J.) In re NAGJI DULA.

—No revision lies at the instance of private person.

An order of acquittal passed under S. 494, Cr. P. Code, should not be revised by the High Court at the instance of a private party. The Crown is the prosecutor and the custodian of the public peace, and if it decides to let an offender go, no other aggrieved party can be heard to object on the ground that he has not taken his full toll of private vengeance. —Criminal proceedings—Conducted as if in a civil suit.

Where a criminal case is launched on the basis of a civil dispute between the parties it would be proper for the Magistrate to consider whether or not the case was of a civil nature and if he came to the conclusion that only a civil wrong had been committed, he should have said so and dealt with the case accordingly. If, on the other hand, he was of opinion that a criminal offence had been committed, though he might refer to the evidence in a manner equally appropriate to civil proceedings he should not have lost sight of this fact that he was dealing with a criminal prosecution and ultimately he should have disposed of the case purely from the standpoint of the criminal law. ## CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 443—Failure to claim benefit under Chap. XLIV.

(and both are open to appeal under S. 449, Cr. P. Code) an enquiry might be asked for and the Court required to decide on the question as to whether if tried outside a Presidency town the case would have been triable under the provisions of Chapter 33, the only object of such an enquiry being that the result of it may be availed of for the purposes of an appeal by the accused in the case of a conviction and by the Crown in the case of an acquittal. The proper time to raise the question is when leave to appeal is applied for. (Walmsley and Mukerji, J.J.) T. C. S. MARTINDALE v. EMPEROR.

—S. 443—Failure to claim.

—Accused not claiming before committing Magistrate—Question cannot be raised after commitment to Sessions.

A claim by the accused and a finding by the Magistrate are necessary ingredients for the application of the provisions of Ch. 33. If any such claim is made prior to commitment and there is no finding by the Magistrate the question cannot be raised in the Court of Sessions. If such a claim is made and a finding favourable to the accused is recorded by the Magistrate, the Sessions Judge would be bound to act under the provisions of Ch. 33, and could not refuse to do so on the ground that those provisions did not apply. In the case of acceptance of the claim of the accused person the finding of the Magistrate would be final. When the finding of the Magistrate is adverse to the claim it is final unless the claimant appeals and in the case of an appeal the decision of the Sessions Judge shall be final. Where the accused merely stated that they were European British Subjects and claimed to be tried as such according to the provisions of the Code,

Held, that there was no claim to be tried under Ch. XXXIII. (Dalal, J.C.) F. S. HARV v. EMPEROR.

—S. 443—Failure to claim benefit under Chap. XLIV.

—Effect of.

Per Walmsley, J.—The omission of the accused person to avail himself of the right to claim the benefit of S. 528-A, does not conclude the matter and he is not debarred from urging that the conditions mentioned in cls. (a) or (b) of S. 443, exist.

Per Mukerji, J.—A claim to be tried under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII of the Code is wholly different from a claim to be tried as a European British subject or an Indian British subject or a European not being a European British subject or an American. It is the latter claim only which is dealt with in Chapter XLIV of the Code in which section 528-A and 528-B occur and so far as the former claim is concerned the question of status of the claimant does not always arise as is evident from the provisions of sec. 443 (1) (b) of the Code. Consequently Ss. 528-A and 528-B. can have no application to S. 449 under which the right of appeal is claimed in Ch. 33. Emperor v. Harendra Chandra Chakravarti, (Foll.) —Prosecution solely relying on admissions—Acquittal by lower Court—No case for remand.

In a case where the prosecution produces no evidence and relies entirely on admissions by the accused and where the trial Court acquits the accused the Appellate Court should not remand the case for proper trial, such admissions not being sufficient to enable the Crown to procure a legal decision and there being no material for the High Court to supplement the deficiencies of the prosecution by remanding the case for proper trial. —S. 449—Claim wrongly allowed.

—Error of the order cannot be challenged in appeal from conviction.

There is a clear distinction between a claim to be tried as a European subject and a claim to be dealt with under the provisions of Ch. 33. But if that distinction is not properly appreciated by the enquiring Magistrate and an order is passed purporting to be under S. 443, it cannot be disputed by the Crown in opposing an appeal from the conviction which follows. In such case therefore, the appeal must be dealt with, on matters of facts and matters of law, as contemplated by S. 449 (1), Cr. P. Code. (Suhrwardy and Mukerji, J.J.) I. G. SINGLETON v. —S. 449—Jurisdiction to entertain application.

—The question as to application for leave being made to the Judge who tried the case is a mere matter of convenience though it is desirable that such applications should be made to him. A Magistrate has no power under the Code to appoint a guardian ad litem for a lunatic in a proceeding under S. 488. Such proceedings may be quasi civil but they are also criminal and are wholly governed by the provisions of the Cr. P. Code alone. Where in such a case, the counter-petitioner pleads insanity, it is the Magistrate's duty to hold a judicial enquiry and put him if necessary under medical observation. If as a result of the enquiry, Court is satisfied that he is sane and capable of understanding the proceedings, then the matter is simple. But if he concludes that he is insane and not capable of understanding the proceedings and incapable of understanding questions put to him and giving rational answers, he must postpone further proceedings until he reverts to sanity. It is incumbent on the Sessions Judge himself to hold an enquiry on the question whether the accused was capable of making his defence when the latter came before him on commitment, to take the opinion of the assessors on that question, and to come to a decision before proceeding further with the trial. If he has any reason for supposing that the accused when brought up for trial was of unsound mind, the question whether he was of unsound mind at the time of the alleged offence is an entirely separate one to be enquired into in entirely separate manner. —S. 476—"Court", meaning of—Trial Court.

—S. 476 is self-contained—Ordinarily the original Court should prefer complaint.

S. 476 must be construed as self-contained and exhaustive, in respect of the matter of a Court making complaint against litigants on the ground of perjury or forgery. The legislature did not intend the power of making a complaint conferred by this section to be exercised by anyone but the Court before whom the offence has been committed or a Court to which appeals from that Court ordinarily lie. The section contemplates that ordinarily the Court to prefer the complaint shall be the original Court which heard the case and that an appellate Court should only make a complaint when the suit has been before it on appeal or when the original Court has granted or refused a complaint and its order is appealed from to the appellate Court. It was not intended by the legislature that while proceedings were going on before the original Court the appellate Court should step in and deal with the matter. The District Court, apart from its powers as an appellate Court under S. 476 (b), can only consider the desirability of itself preferring a complaint, if there is some prima facie ground for its so doing. Such prima facie ground will exist if the original Court is considering the matter and certainly will not exist if the appellate Court has no reason to believe that sanction should be granted. Section 476 contemplates that after making such inquiry as may be necessary, the Court should make a complaint in writing. It is for the Court acting under S. 476 to make any inquiry that is necessary and then to make a complaint against the person or persons who, he is satisfied, have committed an offence. The section does not contemplate that the Court should send the case to a Magistrate for inquiry whether the offence it suspects has been really committed, and for prosecution, if the Magistrate is so satisfied. The Court must be satisfied that there is a prima facie case against each person sent to the Magistrate, and then it can lay a complaint under S. 476. (Adami and Sen, J.J.) CHAMARI SINGH v. —S. 476—Duty of Court—Perjury —Proper complaint.

It is absolutely necessary to give the particular false statements in a complaint for the offence of giving false evidence and therefore a complaint merely quoting S. 193, Penal Code, alleging fabrication of false evidence without any allegations of having given false evidence can in no sense be deemed to be a complaint for an offence of intentionally giving false evidence. —Complaint—Contents of.

A complaint of offence under S. 193, I. P. C. must state what was the false evidence given by the accused. It is not for the Magistrate to fish about in order to find out what statements the complaining Court may have considered to be false. The complaint itself must make it clear; otherwise a complaint under S. 193 cannot stand. (Wallace and Madhavan Nair, J.J.) KALYANJI v. RAM DEEN. 86 I. C. 449 = 48 Mad. 395 = 21 M. L. —It is not customary to prosecute persons under S. 476 in mere matters of oath against oath, which may be a question of public policy rather than a question of law. Before complaining against a person under S. 476, the Judge must be convinced in his own mind that the trial will end in a conviction and he can hardly say that although the accused will probably ultimately be acquitted because there is no evidence that his statement is more than incredible, yet at the same time this is not a point to which he need direct his attention in framing a complaint. —S. 476—Duty of Court—Sufficiency of evidence.

—Before a Court is justified in making an order under S. 476 of the Cr. P. Code, directing the prosecution of any person, it ought to have before it direct evidence fixing the offence upon the person whom it is sought to charge. It is not sufficient that the evidence in the earlier case may induce some sort of suspicion that the person had been guilty of an offence but there must be distinct evidence of the commission of offence by the person who is to be prosecuted. —S. 476—Finding of Expediency.

—In connexion with the conduct of a proceeding under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, the order of the Magistrate was as follows: "Considered. Cause shown and heard pleaders. There is material for prosecution of (1) B under Ss. 465, 467 and 193, Penal Code; (2) S under Ss. 467, 114 and 193, Penal Code; (3) R under Ss. 467, 114, 471, 193 and 196, Penal Code. Draw up formal complaint against them for their prosecution and trial for the above-noted offences."

Held, that in stating that there was "material for prosecution" of these persons the Magistrate indicated that in his opinion there may be a prima facie case against them. But nowhere within the four corners of this order could it be said that there was any finding recorded such as is referred to in S. 476, nor has he in any way directed his mind to the question as to whether any such order as he makes is expedient in the interest of justice as to bring the order within S. 476 (Pearson and Jack, J.J.) SATIS CHANDRA MALLIK v. EMPEROR. 52 C. L. J. 52 = 1930 Cr. C. 1105 = A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 705.

—Sufficiency of.

The words "expedient in the interest of justice" are not a formula or incantation which must of necessity appear in every order made under S. 476. Section 496 merely requires that the Courts concerned should be of opinion that the interests of justice render it expedient that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in S. 195 (1) (b) or (c). It is sufficient that the Court arrives at such an opinion and also that there is a reasonable prospect of the conviction of the accused there being sufficient evidence to support prosecution. Whether the evidence is believed or not or will be sufficient to justify the conviction of the accused is quite another matter. (Tapp, J.) NAURANG RAI v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 395 = 127 I. —Order under, passed without giving reasons is not illegal.

Although it is desirable that the Court passing an order under S. 476 should state reasons for the order, still an order without reasons is not illegal. He framed no charge and although he made some sort of enquiry it was of a perfunctory character and when he came to write his committal order, he incorporated as the main grounds for committing for trial the reasons which he had given in his judgment in the civil suit in which the document with false entry was filed. —S. 476—Order against strangers.

—Any person who appears to have committed an offence under S. 195 (1) (b) and not only parties to proceedings is contemplated by S. 476.

S. 476 is not restricted to the party making the complaint or actually before the Court, but is wide enough to include any person who appears to have committed an offence mentioned in S. 195 (1) (b) which is not restricted to parties to the proceedings like Cl. (c) of that section. The Court has therefore jurisdiction to prosecute a person who causes a false complaint to be lodged. All that S. 476 requires is that the Court should be satisfied that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an enquiry should be made into an offence which appears to it to have been committed in or in relation to a judicial proceeding. It does not speak of a party to the proceeding. (Suhrawardy and Costello, J.J.) FAZLAR RAHAMAN v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 859 =

The presiding officer of a Court can make a complaint not only against persons who are parties to proceedings before him but also against persons who are not parties. It is only when that general power is taken away by statute that a complaint becomes incompetent unless made by the only authority allowed to do so. There being nothing in S. 476 to the effect that the presiding officer of a Court cannot make a complaint against a person who is not a party, it follows that the general power of the presiding officer to make a complaint is not taken away by implication, because he is the only person who can make a complaint against a party in certain circumstances; A. —Trial begun on basis of sanction under old Code but not completed before the coming into force of amended Code can go on without fresh complaint under amended S. 476.

When a criminal Court has taken cognizance of an offence for perjury, before the amendment of the Cr. P. Code, on a sanction order to a private individual granted before the Code was amended, but has not completed the trial before the amended Code came into force, the trial can go on without fresh complaint under the amended provisions of S. 476, Cr. P. Code. Cr. Misc. Proceedings No. 606 of 1924 and A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 615, Foll.

Per Wallace, J.—In order to decide as to whether a trial founded on a sanction and properly begun on a procedure which has been altered by the amended Cr. P. Code can now go on it is essential not to confuse 'cognizance' with 'jurisdiction.' Once a Court is properly seized of a case, any amendment of law, except an amendment which takes away its jurisdiction to try the offence, cannot affect the Court's authority to proceed with the trial. To hold that an amendment of the procedure of trial under the Code automatically brings to an end all trials founded on the original procedure is not a conclusion which is justified either in law or in commonsense. The consequence of an amendment of procedure is not that all matters properly begun under the old procedure collapse and have to be begun again under the new procedure, but that they shall be continued under the new procedure from the time when the new procedure came into force.

Per Madhavan Nair, J.—Sanction is required only to enable the Court to take cognizance of certain offences and, when once the case is launched and cognizance has been taken by the Magistrate of any offence, nothing short of an amendment which specifically takes away the jurisdiction of the Court to try the offence can affect the right of the Court to go on with the trial according to law. —S. 476—Preliminary Enquiry.

—When necessary.

In each individual case the Court has to decide whether in the interests of justice a preliminary investigation is necessary. In a case where an offence has been committed outside the Court and not in the presence of the Judge it would certainly be judicious if not incumbent upon the Court to hold a preliminary enquiry in order to find out for itself whether such an offence was really committed. But where an offence is committed in the presence of the Court or from a perusal of the record, it is of opinion that it is necessary in the interests of justice that a further enquiry into the matter should be made in the criminal Court, it may make a complaint to that effect to the nearest Magistrate without making any preliminary enquiry. But it cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that in every case it is prudent to hold a preliminary enquiry before making a complaint under S. 476. Each case must be judged on its own facts and there may be a case where the revising authority may think that an action under S. 476 was too hastily taken and that there should be further investigation in the matter. 29 Cal. 349; 10 I. C. 66; 37 Cal. 642; 37 I. C. 469, Rel. on.; A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 282, Diss. from. (Sukrawardy and Costello, J.J.) PURNA CHANDRA DATTA v. SHEIKH DHALU.

—S. 476 gives the discretion to the Court to hold or not to hold a preliminary enquiry. If the Court is of opinion that no preliminary enquiry is necessary it may at once make the complaint. If, on the other hand, it thinks that it is desirable to have a preliminary enquiry, it may adopt any course for the purpose of such an enquiry. The words "preliminary enquiry" under S. 476 may be co-extensive with, if not wider than the words "enquire into the case" in S. 202, Cr. P. Code. A. I. R. 1928 All. 21, Ref.; A. I. —If necessary.

It is true that under the provisions of S. 476 a preliminary enquiry is not legally necessary. But it has been laid down ever since the enactment of the present section that although a preliminary inquiry may not be legally necessary, it should in common prudence be held by every Court before it passes an order under S. 476. —Persons affected cannot claim to cross-examine witnesses.

What a Court has to decide under S. 476 is (a) whether an offence of the kind contemplated appears to have been committed, (b) whether it is expedient in the interests of justice that it should be further enquired into. In order to arrive at a decision the Court may, if it thinks fit, hold such preliminary enquiry as it considers necessary. The nature, method and extent of the preliminary enquiry are, entirely at its discretion. The enquiry need not be such as to satisfy the Court that an offence actually has been committed but merely that an offence appears to have been committed. Where an appeal is pending under the provisions of S. 476-B it should be disposed of under the provisions of S. 476-B and reference to O. 41, R. 11, C. P. Code in the order dismissing the appeal is irrelevant. An appeal from order passed under S. 476 is an appeal in exercise of statutory right of appeal and the provisions of S. 476-B should be complied with. The Court should issue notices to both the parties concerned in the matter, it should send for the record, examine the case and should come to an independent finding whether, under the circumstances, the petitioners would be put in jeopardy by a complaint being lodged against them.

—Proceedings for perjury against a witness should be started after conclusion of the case in which the witness gives evidence.

Proceedings under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, should not be taken until the case, in which the alleged false evidence was given, have been finally disposed of. Such a hasty proceeding, as placing a witness on a trial as an accused immediately after he has given his evidence, is bad because the obvious result of such a step would be to intimidate subsequent witnesses and defeat the object of the trial. The proper time to apply under S. 476 for the prosecution of witnesses for perjury is after the final disposal of the suit in which he was examined as a witness. (Wadegaonkar, A. J. C.) KALU v. Persons entitled to move under.

Since 1923 proceedings under S. 476, Cr. P. Code are taken only by the Court in the interests of justice when it thinks fit to do so. It is not now open to a private person to take proceedings after taking the sanction of the Court under S. 195. A private person may move the Court but it is for the Court to decide whether to take action and initiate the proceedings. A person moving the Court to take action under S. 476 cannot therefore be considered to be an interested person within the meaning of S. 526 (3) and also has no locus standi to apply for the transfer of a case, the Court being the "complainant." An order under S. 476 should be made either at the close of the proceedings or so shortly thereafter that it may reasonably be said that the order is part of the proceeding. The power conferred by S. 476 can be exercised by the Court only in the course of the judicial proceeding or at its conclusion or so shortly thereafter as to make it really the continuation of the same proceeding in the course of which the offence was committed. The delay in starting proceedings under S. 476 should not receive any encouragement, as it is highly unjust and improper. 31 Mad. 140 (F. B.) and 32 Mad. 49 (F. B.), Foll.; 43 Bom. 300, Not Foll. Under S. 476-B it is not necessary for an appeal to be filed that there should be a finding recorded in writing that further enquiry is expedient in the interest of justice. Under that section the mere fact that a complaint has been made opens the way to an appeal. Where it appeared that the accused could have appealed against a complaint filed by an Income-tax Officer though there was no finding, and it also appeared that the appeal would have been of no value even if it had been preferred, because the appellate Income-tax Officer was really to the person who ordered the filing of the complaint, held, that the proceeding was not vitiated. It matters nothing whatever what the result of the appeal may be. If any particular person is for the first time ordered to be prosecuted by the superior Court, his remedy after that is to take his defence before a jury or Magistrate, according to the nature of the case. —Maintenance order—Cancellation—Order of—If retrospective.

A wife who had been granted maintenance sued for recovery of arrears due and an order cancelling the maintenance on ground of adultery had been afterwards passed.

Held, that the cancelling order could not have retrospective effect so as to disallow the prior allowed maintenance and that a maintenance order stood good until it is cancelled. —Single act of adultery does not necessarily disentitle a Magistrate to award maintenance.

A single act of adultery does not necessarily amount to "living in adultery" within the meaning of Cl. (4) of S. 488 and will not justify a Magistrate in refusing maintenance, because the words "living in adultery"

Unless continuity of conduct is established, it cannot be inferred from a single act of adultery that the woman is "living in adultery". The words “in the whole” mean that only a sum of money not exceeding Rs. 100 should be ordered to be paid and no other payment either in the shape of fees or medical expenses, etc., should be ordered to be paid. The words do not mean that when a woman makes an application for herself and for children she could only be given Rs. 100 for the maintenance of herself and of her children whatever be the number. —S. 488—Compromise.
—Effect of.

Where, in an application under S. 488, the parties arrive at a compromise, the proper course for the Court is to dismiss the application leaving the parties to enforce the compromise in civil Courts. Such a compromise is a bar to an application under S. 489. An order of maintenance passed in accordance with a compromise cannot be enforced by a criminal Court. 42 P. R. 1888 and 39 P. R. 1905 (Cr.) Rel. on. (Addison, J.) SHAM SINGH v. MT. HATKAM DEVI. 127 I. C. 13 = 31 Cr. L. J. 1179 = 1930 Cr. C. 623 = A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 524.

—Compromise effected to pay maintenance—Section does not apply.

Once a compromise is entered into to pay maintenance there is no refusal to maintain on the part of the husband and therefore S. 488 has no longer any application. An order passed regarding such a compromise is without jurisdiction. The proper remedy is by way of civil Courts to enforce the compromise: 42 P. R. 1888, Cr.; 39 P. R. 1905 (Cr.) Foll. (Dalip Singh, J.) BUDHU RAM v. KHEN DEO. 95 I. C. 315 = 27 Cr. L. J. 779 = A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 469.

CR. P. CODE (1898).

—S. 488—Decree for maintenance.

—Magistrate's jurisdiction is not ousted.

A mere decree of a civil Court awarding maintenance which has become unexecuted owing to the pendency of the insolvency proceedings against the husband is not equivalent to maintaining the wife. Therefore, the Magistrate has jurisdiction under S. 488 to pass an order for maintenance in favour of the wife : A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 59, Rel. on. and A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 230, Dist. (Patkar and Wild, J.J.) MAHAMED ALI MITHA-BHAI, In re. 124 I. C. 127=31 Bom. L. R. 1866=31 Cr. L. J. 609=A. I. R. 1930 Bom. 144.

—Weight of decree varies with circumstances.

Weight to be attached to a decree must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down that a decree of a Civil Court is for ever binding on the Magistrate or that his discretion is never fettered. Where the husband had obtained decree for restitution of conjugal rights but was ill-treating wife :

Held, Magistrate could ignore decree and permit wife to live apart, while granting her maintenance under S. 488, Cr. Pro. Code. Maintenance can be granted to wife with permission to live separate from husband, notwithstanding decree for restitution of conjugal rights, if wife is ill-treated. (Boys, J.) RAJPATTI v. —Paternity of child—Proof of—Corroboration.
 In a case under S. 488, where the question at issue is, whether a certain man was the father of a certain child, it is prima facie improper to accept without corroboration the mere statement on oath of the mother who asserts the paternity. Her evidence in such a case cannot but be highly interested, and it would be unreasonable and improper for any Court to act merely on her own word without some independent corroboration of it.

A Municipal record of the birth of the child of what the mother herself said at the time of the birth is not an independent corroboration nor can the fact that letters, of which the contents were not known, passed between the mother and the alleged father is such a corroboration. The kind of evidence that one would look for to be given as corroboration in such a case would be evidence that at or about that time when the child was conceived, the petitioner was frequenting the society of the counter-petitioner, and had opportunities of access to her. —Maintenance of child—What it includes.
 S. 488 contemplates application by a wife or a child. Where the widow alleged herself to be a discarded mistress, and the application was made by her for the school fees of her son.
Held, that this would require only a formal amendment of the application as one by the woman as guardian of the child and that the amendment might be made by the Court on its own motion. The payment of money to the child's mother by the alleged father could be weighed as evidence of an intimacy between the alleged father and the woman, but in no sense could it be regarded as a binding composition of the claims of the child. The object of proceedings for maintenance is to prevent vagrancy and that object is attained by the provision of lodging, food and clothing. A husband is bound to maintain his wife but he is not bound to do more than supply her with lodging, food and clothing; he is not bound to maintain her as his wife. 16 Bom. 269, Ref. to. 4 I. C. 758, Foll.

A Court ought to allow an application framed as one for educational expenses into one for maintenance only if it was satisfied that the application as framed was framed in error, that what the woman really wanted on behalf of the child was maintenance, and not where the application had been deliberately and purposely framed. —S. 488—Neglect to maintain.

—Neglect or refusal to maintain is first essential to invest Court with jurisdiction under S. 488.

In order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate to take proceedings under S. 488 the first essential is to find that the respondent has neglected or refused to maintain the person for whose maintenance an allowance is asked for. Where wife is allowed maintenance under S. 488 the mere fact that the son is of tender years and that it is in the interests of the minor son that he should be left with the mother till the father is able to get the custody of the minor son from the civil Court is not sufficient to invest the criminal Courts with jurisdiction under S. 488 as regards the son unless it can be shown that he has neglected or refused to maintain the boy. In the case of a Hindu girl of only 13 years of age her consent or otherwise to go and stay with her husband is quite immaterial. —Proceedings for habeas corpus in respect of child—Welfare of the child is the dominant question—The opinion of an intelligent grown-up child will weigh in the estimation of the Court.

On an application by the de jure guardian for habeas corpus in respect of a child detained against its will the dominant question is what conduces to the interests and welfare of the infant and the Court must dispose of the application with reference to it. The moral, the religious and the physical welfare and the ties of affection as also the opinion of the child if it is capable of forming an intelligent opinion are to be taken into consideration. The opinion of the child is an important element and the degree of the child's mental development must to a certain extent weigh with the Court. The age of the infant is also an important factor. There is no inflexible rule in England that a boy over 14 and a girl over 16 will have the final voice and that the wishes of the infant have to be given effect to. Even if such a rule exists, it is too artificial to be applicable in India. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.) SARASWATHI AMMAL v. DANAKOTI AMMAL. 85 I. C. 840=1924 M. W. N. 870=20 M. L. —S. 494.—Discretion.

Allowing withdrawal is discretionary.

The language of S. 494 is very wide and gives a discretion to the Magistrate as to whether he would consent to the withdrawal of a prosecution by the Public Prosecutor—Such discretion to be exercised not arbitrarily but must be based on correct legal principles. (Suhrawardy and Mitter, J.J.) G. V. RAMAN v. EMPEROR. 33 C. W. N. 468=56 Cal. 1023=121 I.C. 678=31 Cr. L. J. 315=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 319.

—S. 494.—Effect of withdrawal.

S. 494 of the Code stands by itself. The effect of the section is that as soon as an accused is discharged under that section he is taken away from the category of an accused person and becomes under the general principles of law a competent witness against his co-accused. (Suhrawardy and Mitter, J.J.) G. V. RAMAN v. EMPEROR. 33 C. W. N. 468=56 Cal. 1023=121 I. C. 678=31 Cr. L. J. 315=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 319.

An order of discharge passed on withdrawal of the case by the Public Prosecutor does not amount to an acquittal. There is no difference in law in the case of a person discharged by a Magistrate on a consideration of the evidence tendered against him and of a person discharged at the instance of the Public Prosecutor under S. 494. —S. 494—Reasons for consent.

—If should be stated.

Per Percival, A. J. C.—It is not "obligatory" on the Court to record reasons for permitting a withdrawal. That is to say the mere fact that the Magistrate has not recorded reasons for withdrawal of itself is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the granting of application for withdrawal and the acquittal of the accused.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—There is nothing in S. 494 to require the Magistrate to record his reasons at the time of allowing the withdrawal of a case. But it is desirable that where a case is permitted to be withdrawn there should be some materials on the record of the case to satisfy the High Court that prima facie there was some good ground for the withdrawal of the case and that it was not left to the whim of the Public Prosecutor. Where the District Magistrate has been moved by an application from the accused to have the case withdrawn either the original application of the accused or an application from the Public Prosecutor stating briefly the reasons for withdrawal should be placed on the record or in any event the Court should in its own order give an indication as to the circumstances under which it grants its sanction. In the absence of such material on the record it is difficult for Government to decide if an appeal should be preferred or for the High Court to decide if the order sanctioning withdrawal is one which should not be interfered with. —Court must record reasons for supporting that discretion was rightly exercised.

Although a reasoned judgment establishing the propriety of the order, as required by S. 367, is not necessary in the case of the order, passed under S. 494, still there must be something on record to show why the Magistrate consented to the withdrawal. The Court should record its reasons in order that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised. 22 C. W. N. 69; A. I. —Reasons must be satisfactory.

Where the only reason given by the Court for allowing withdrawal from prosecution was that on a previous trial in connection with the riot in connection with which the present accused were charged six persons had already been convicted and punished, being sentenced to various terms of punishment. Held, that the imprisonment of the first six cannot be regarded as a vicarious atonement for the sins, if any, committed by the present accused. The only prosecutor who may under the Code withdraw from a prosecution without the consent of the Court and without giving reasons is the Advocate-General. When a Court acting under S. 494 gives its consent to a withdrawal from the prosecution, it is acting in a judicial capacity and therefore it should —Principles guiding Magistrates in granting bail indicated.

The object of the detention of the accused being to secure his appearance to abide the sentence of law, the principal enquiry is, whether a recognizance would effect that end. In seeking an answer to this enquiry, Courts have to consider the seriousness of the charge, the nature of the evidence, the severity of the punishment prescribed for the offence, and in some instances the character, means and standing of the accused. The intention of the Legislature is that an accused person should be brought before a magistrate competent to try him with as little delay as possible, and that occasions for remand to jail custody of undertrial prisoners should be as few as possible. It must be understood that while a wide discretion as to the grant of bail in cases other than those involving capital punishment has now been placed in the hands of magistrates, they are bound when weighing the probability of the prisoner appearing for trial, to consider the nature of the offence charged, the character of the evidence against the prisoner and the punishment which, in the event of conviction, is likely to be inflicted on the prisoner. Again, while mere vague allegations that the prisoner, if released, will tutor witnesses, should not be taken into account, the magistrate may well refuse to enlarge on bail where the prisoner is of such a character that his presence at large will intimidate witnesses, or where there are reasonable grounds for believing that he will use his liberty to suborn evidence. —Powers of trial Court and High Court.

S. 497 deals with the powers of the trial Courts and the trial Court has no further power, but the High Court as Court of appeal is not so restricted and it can act according to its own discretion. This discretion, however, is not to be used arbitrarily. It must be based on some judicial principles. In this case, on the ground that if the accused were kept in custody they would not be able to conduct their defence properly, the High Court released them on bail. (*Wazir Hasan, J. —The view of the law that all the persons accused of non-bailable offence should be released on bail, unless and until the Court is satisfied and there are good grounds for believing them to be guilty, is absolutely mistaken. Persons accused of non-bailable offences should not be released on bail as a rule, but they may be so released, if there are reasons for believing that the case against them is such that it is not likely to succeed, or if there are special circumstances justifying bail. guilt or innocence. It would be entirely exceeding its function, if it did that in any detail, but it may incidentally have to look at the weight of the evidence against the accused, as a necessary part of what is its proper function, that is, to enquire whether the giving of the bail as opposed to the arrest of the accused might lead to a real danger of his absconding and not appearing to take his trial, or whether there is any real reason to suppose that he is likely to tamper with the witnesses, who would be called against him. —There is no difference between the English and the Indian practice. Bail is not to be withheld merely as a punishment and the requirements as to bail are merely to secure the attendance of the accused at the trial. The test is to be applied by reference to the following considerations amongst others: (1) The nature of the accusation. (2) The nature of the evidence in support of the accusation. (3) The severity of the punishment which conviction will entail. (4) The character of the sureties, that is to say, whether they are independent or indemnified by the accused. (5) The character and behaviour of the accused. Any allegation that the accused is tampering, or attempting to tamper, with witnesses, and thereby obstructing the course of justice, would be a very cogent ground for refusing bail. In re Robinson (1854) 2 W. Before it becomes incumbent on a Magistrate to take action under S. 506, Cr. P. Code, it must appear that the evidence of the witness is necessary for the ends of Justice. Where in a proceeding under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, a certain person was cited as witness by one of the parties and although processes were issued against him on three occasions he did not attend Court on account of illness and thereupon the party who summoned him applied to the Magistrate for the issue of a commission for his examination, held, that the Magistrate was entitled to dismiss the application on the ground that the evidence of the particular witness was not quite necessary. Under S. 510 any document purporting to be a report under the hand of a chemical examiner upon any matter duly submitted to him for examination and report may be used as evidence in any enquiry, trial or other proceeding. This however does not imply that without tendering it in evidence it can be made use of for the first time in appeal. It is a piece of evidence that does not require any formal proof but at the same time it must be tendered as evidence and used as such so that the accused may have a chance of questioning it. —Finding that accused has absconded is not necessary

S. 512 requires only that before the Court records the depositions of the witnesses for the prosecution under this section, it should be proved that the accused person has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, but it does not require that a finding should be given to that effect. 41 All. 60, Foll. —Depositions when can be used—Witness unable to remember details of occurrence can refresh memory.

A deposition recorded under S. 512 can only be given in evidence if the deponent is dead or is incapable of giving evidence or his attendance cannot be procured without an unreasonable amount of delay, expense or inconvenience. The mere fact that he is unable to remember the details of the occurrence does not render him incapable of giving evidence within the meaning of the section and his obvious deposition cannot be put in evidence against the accused person. The proper procedure in such a case is to read out his previous deposition of the witness under the provisions of S. 159 of the Evidence Act to refresh his memory and then to ask him whether he remembers the details of the occurrence. (Scott-Smith, J.) BHICA v. EMPEROR. 76 I. C. 31=25 Cr. L. J. 95=A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 605.

—S. 512—Evidence in other case.

—Evidence referring to absconding person given at a previous trial of different accused, cannot be used subsequently at the trial of the absconding accused.

When witnesses, who have given evidence at a previous trial against persons then on their trial, happen to have referred in the course of their evidence at the trial to a person who is absconding and is subsequently tried, their statements cannot be read at the subsequent trial of the accused who was then absconding, merely because they happen to be absent and cannot give evidence. The objection to the evidence is the fundamental objection that statements made against a person in his absence cannot be used as evidence against him in a criminal trial. Exceptions to that fundamental rule can only be created by statute and when a statute permits something to be done which a fundamental rule prohibits, that thing can only be done by strict compliance of the statute which creates the exception. There is a palpable distinction between bonds which are not and those which are for appearance before a Court. Proof other than is directly before the Court in its own record is required in the former and not in the latter. Where the Court had before it the order for bail, the bail-bond and the fact that the petitioners did not produce the accused, the provisions of S. 514 (1) were substantially complied with and the High Court would not be justified in interfering in revision where there was no possible prejudice on the ground that the proceedings of the Sessions Judge under S. 514 were without jurisdiction as he had before him neither any proof that the bail-bond had been forfeited nor did he record the grounds of such proof before he called upon the petitioners to show cause why the penalty of the bond should not be paid. —Cash is not strictly speaking property except if it can be identified in specie—Procedure pointed out.

Cash is not, strictly speaking, property except in so far as it is capable of being possessed and identified in specie. If it is certain that the actual coins found on the thieves or receivers of stolen property are the actual coins which have been subject of theft then it is permissible to treat such cash as stolen property. It is often safer in such cases to inflict a fine and to apply the coins found on the person of the accused towards the payment of fine, and then to apply the amount of fine if necessary to compensation. But in no conceivable way can coins which have been put into circulation and passed on to the public be treated in the same way as stolen coins actually remaining in the possession of the thieves. The principle of caveat emptor never applies to currency coins. (Kennedy, J. C. and DeSouza, A. J. C.) PURSU v. EMPEROR.

—S. 517—Limitation.

—Powers under—No limitation for application under S. 517, exists.

No period of limitation is prescribed for an application for restoration of property under S. 517, it can be made within a reasonable time from the date on which an accused person is acquitted of the crime with which he is charged. The words "and make any further orders that may be just," in S. 520 are obviously intended to cover cases of this nature and to enable superior Courts to pass proper orders in cases where property has been erroneously disposed of under S. 517. (Moti Sagar, J.) KANSHI RAM v. THE CROWN. 73 I. C. 937 = 4 Lah. 49 = 3 P. W. R. Cr. 1923 = 24 Cr. L. J. 713 = A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 75.

—S. 517—Nature of proceeding.

—Proceeding under S. 512 is neither 'inquiry' nor 'trial'—Order under S. 517 must be made only after inquiry—No order for restoration should be made in doubtful cases.

A proceeding under sub-S. (1) of S. 512 is neither an inquiry nor a trial within the meaning of S. 517. But a Magistrate is bound, in any case, to hold an enquiry of some sort before he can make order for the disposal of property which has been seized and produced before him. Where there is no adjudication on the question of the accused's guilt or innocence an order under S. 517 is bad. Even where there has been a finding against the person charged with an offence, questions of some nicety may arise which involve a consideration of civil law and it is not the function of a criminal court to decide such questions for the purpose of ordering the return of property to one or other of two contending parties. Where there can be no doubt whatsoever that the pledge is involved, or in other words, that the pledgee is not entitled to retain possession of the articles pledged because it had been obtained from the original owner by what is palpably and unmistakeably an offence or fraud, or because the circumstances clearly indicate impropriety, or an absence of good faith on the part of the pledge, a magistrate is justified in directing its return to the original owner. But where there is a doubt, not necessarily a strong doubt, not even a reasonably arguable one, such as may arise where the decision involves a contentious point of civil law, the normal course of restoring the property to the person from whom it was seized should be followed, and the dissatisfied party should be left to seek his remedy in a civil court. —S. 517—Order after acquittal.

—Where a magistrate finds the accused not guilty of the offence of cheating and acquits him, he cannot order that the property in respect of which the offence was alleged to be committed, and which is in possession of the accused should be restored to the complainant. —S. 517—Power under.

—S. 517 does not limit the power of the trying magistrate or judge, who has omitted to pass an order for disposal of exhibits as part of his judgment convicting the accused, so as to deprive him of all power to subsequently pass orders for disposal of the property; similarly it does not limit the powers of a Court of Appeal or revision. —S. 517—Purchaser's rights.

—Purchaser of the commodity has a right to be heard.

Where a question of bona fides and of title by purchase or otherwise, clearly arises the complainant should be left to his remedy in the civil court. But the jurisdiction of the criminal court is confined to an order at the conclusion of the trial for the disposal of the property, which has been stolen and which is before it in the criminal proceeding. It need not be in the possession of the court but it must be still capable of being earmarked and such an order can only be made at the conclusion of the trial and in the presence of the purchaser who has a right to be heard. It is not necessary for a petitioner to establish that the Magistrate is actually prejudiced against him. In order to decide the advisability of transfer, the question is not whether the belief that the applicant would not get justice is reasonable or unreasonable but whether it exists or not, though the only way of deciding whether it exists or not is to see whether it might reasonably be expected to exist in a person of the standard of intelligence and honesty common in the class to which the accused belongs. —Principle explained.

It is not sufficient for the applicant for transfer merely to allege that he would not get an impartial trial, but he must place before the Court the facts which gave rise to this belief in his mind. The Court should not make an order for transfer unless it is satisfied that on the facts disclosed in the application and affidavit there arises a reasonable apprehension that the applicant may not have a fair and impartial trial. But at the same time what the Court has to consider is not merely the question whether there has been any real bias in the mind of the presiding Judge against the applicant, but also the further question whether incidents may not have happened which, though they may be susceptible of explanation and may have happened without there being any real bias in the mind of the judge, are nevertheless such as are calculated to create in the mind of the applicant a justifiable apprehension that he would not have an impartial trial. The law has regard not so much to the motive which might be supposed to bias the Judge, as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. One important object is to clear away every thing which might engender suspicion and distrust of the tribunal, and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is essential to social order and security. (Surgent v. Dale (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 558, Ref. (*Shadi Lal, C. —General rule can't be laid down.

It is difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule under which transfer is made, for the circumstances of one case might differ from those of the other but the principles under the decisions of the various cases go to establish that if there are circumstances in a case which raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of an accused person that he would not receive fair dealings at his trial the case should be transferred to a calmer atmosphere. Where it appeared (i) that during the course of trial the Magistrate, in contravention of the rule that the Magistrates are not expected to receive private communications either from the parties or their counsel received a letter from the witness for defence calculated to create a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioner that he was a friend of the Magistrate; (ii) that the witnesses of the petitioner were treated in a manner different from that in which witnesses of the opposite party were treated; (iii) that Magistrate while complying with the prayer for postponement as the petitioner wanted to move for transfer to another Court passed an illegal order imposing condition when he had not discretion but to postpone.

It is not necessary, when supporting an application for transfer, to establish that there is any actual bias in the mind of the Magistrate concerned. It is the cumulative effect likely to be produced on the mind of an ordinary reasonable accused person that has to be seen. The question whether sufficient grounds are made out for a transfer is often a matter of opinion and depends on inferences to be drawn from facts that have happened. (*Sulaiman, Ag. C. Magistrate's attempt to compromise case can reasonably cause suspicion of partiality.

A natural suspicion can arise in the minds of parties and the case should be transferred on the application of one of the parties where the Magistrate has made an attempt to have the case compromised because what the Court has to consider in a question of transfer is not alone the question whether the Presiding Magistrate has really any bias in his mind against the applicant for transfer but also whether the applicant for transfer may reasonably have entertained an apprehension of partiality on the part of the Magistrate in view of any incidents which may have happened, though such incidents are capable of explanation and may be altogether independent in their origin of any actual bias in the Magistrate's mind: 35 All. 5 Foll. In regard to a petition to transfer a case from one Magistrate to another the question to be considered is whether it is possible from the accused's point of view, to say that his apprehension is not reasonable. —Criterion for transfer.

The criterion for a transfer under Cl. (1) (a), S. 526, is that the High Court must be of opinion that the applicant will not receive a fair and impartial trial in the Court below. The mere fact that the applicant entertains an absolutely unreasonable belief that he will not have a fair trial would not be sufficient to order a transfer under Cl. (e), S. 526 (1), Cr. P. Code. A. —It is not sufficient to found an application for transfer that the applicant is apprehensive that he will not get a fair trial. No Court ought to interfere by an order for transfer unless it is satisfied by clear and unimpeachable evidence that the Court, or the individual, from whom it is proposed to transfer the case, has by some personal conduct rendered himself unfit, or unlikely to give the accused a fair trial. Subject to that salutary provision local people must take the local Courts as they find them. (Walsh, Ag. C. J.) RAZA HUSAIN v. EMPEROR. 99 I. C. 105 = 8 L. R. A. Cr. 17 = 28 Cr. L. J. 73 = 7 A. —In cases of doubt of personal impartiality of the Judge or where his acts and orders create reasonable apprehension in accused, transfer should be granted but not otherwise.

Where any doubt can be shown as regards the personal impartiality of the presiding Judge of the Court, a transfer should immediately be granted; but where no such personal grounds can be shown a transfer should only be granted when the Magistrate has shown by his acts or orders that there is a possibility that he may be prejudiced against the accused or, at any rate, that the accused might have a reasonable apprehension that he is so prejudiced. Such an apprehension should not arise from the ordinary acts of a Magistrate performed in the course of a case. During the conduct of a protracted trial it necessarily happens that many points arise upon which the Magistrate has to give a decision, and the fact that he makes a decision against the accused is not sufficient to warrant any apprehension of impartiality if the order is passed in good faith and the reasons for the order are duly stated. 10 N. A Judge or Magistrate having outside knowledge in respect of matters which form the subject-matter of the proceedings before him and having such knowledge from outside the Court before the actual hearing of these proceedings commences is in a position of embarrassment in dealing with the case. The question is not in these cases as to whether the Magistrate having such outside knowledge will utilise that knowledge for the purpose of decision in the case but the question is whether there can be any reasonable apprehension in the minds of the accused persons that the Magistrate having the outside knowledge before him may not be betrayed by it into taking a view which the evidence might not support. Where the susceptibilities of the accused persons are reasonably moved by the reason of the fact that the Magistrate has outside knowledge not based on evidence on record, the case should be transferred from him: *Sergeant v. —Bona fide apprehension by reasonable man that accused will not receive fair trial is sufficient ground—Magistrate convicting other persons on similar evidence is no ground.

The policy of law is to inspire confidence in the minds of the accused persons in the administration of justice and in the integrity of the Magistracy. The superior Courts are expected to have due regard to the susceptibilities of the accused persons and if they are satisfied that there are reasonable grounds, that is, grounds which a reasonable person placed in the position of an accused person considers to be sufficient for entertaining apprehension that the accused will not have a fair trial in the Court of the Magistrate then an order for transfer should be made. The mere fact that the Magistrate has on a previous occasion tried other cases against other accused on similar evidence and convicted them is no ground for transfer. A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 257 and 4 C. though they may be susceptible of explanation, are nevertheless calculated to create in the minds of the accused a reasonable apprehension that they would not have a fair and impartial trial. In determining whether the apprehension is reasonable or not the Court has not to come to a conclusion on abstract principles but has to bear in mind the degree of intelligence of the accused. *Sergeant v. If an accused person does in fact believe that he will not have a fair and impartial trial in a certain tribunal, it is in the last degree inexpedient that he should be tried by it and the case must be transferred, unless that is impossible, however high the certainty of the impartiality of that tribunal may be in the minds of all right-thinking men, and however discreditable to him the existence of that belief in his mind may be. But the allegation of the accused, like any other, must be examined and found true before it can be accepted. The question is not whether the belief is reasonable or unreasonable but whether it exists or not though the only way of deciding whether it exists or not is to see whether it might reasonably be expected to exist in a person of the standards of intelligence and honest common in the class to which the accused belongs. 10 N. —Accused's degree of intelligence important factor.

It is of the utmost importance that persons arraigned before the Court should have confidence in the impartiality of the Court and if a person has a reasonable cause to apprehend that the Court before whom he is being tried is not completely free from bias, a transfer should be directed. In deciding what is reasonable cause, regard must be had not so much to the motives which might be supposed to bias the judge as to susceptibility of the parties. Hence the degree of intelligence possessed by an accused who applies for transfer must be taken into consideration while deciding his application. If the actions of the Judge though capable of being explained and though traceable to a superior sense of duty are calculated to create in the mind of the accused an apprehension that he may not have an impartial trial the case should be transferred to some other Judge for trial. —Transfer even at advanced stage of trial—When ordered.

If good grounds for a transfer of a criminal case are made out, the Court ought not to refuse it merely because the case has reached an advanced stage or that the transfer may entail expense and trouble to all concerned. A Magistrate made certain premature and ill-advised remarks regarding the testimony of certain defence witnesses and held out threats to the accused regarding the sentence and the effect of his application for transfer of a case. From all this it appeared that the attitude of the Magistrate towards the accused was hostile to them; and a reasonable apprehension was created in the mind of the accused that he would not get justice from him. The trial of the case however, was so far advanced that the entire evidence for the prosecution and the defence had been recorded and a date was fixed for the hearing of arguments.

Held, the case was a fit one for ordering a transfer. Misc. Revn. No. 104 of 1924; Misc. Cr. Case No. 78 of 1924, Rel. on. (Jai Lal, J.) SIKANDAR LAL PURI v. EMPEROR. 113 I. C. 321=10 Lah. 778=

—Copy of statement of witnesses to police—Refusal to grant.

When a copy of a written statement made by a witness before the police is asked for, it is the bounden duty of the Magistrate, and it does not depend upon his volition or good-will that he should refer to the statement made before the police and furnish a copy or record a definite order that he did not think it expedient in the interests of justice to furnish the accused with the copy. Nor can he insist upon a written application for the same an oral request being sufficient. Therefore, insistence on a written application and refusal to grant copies on misapprehension of law laid down under S. 162, or on other flimsy pretext are enough circumstances to give the accused person reasonable belief that the Magistrate had no desire to be fair to him. 36 Cal. 560, Ref. Cases which assume an importance of their own should be tried in a calm and quiet atmosphere where all proper and legitimate facilities can be provided both to the prosecution and the defence. Where certain incidents take place in a district, which raise a reasonable apprehension in the minds of the accused that they cannot have a fair and impartial trial there, then the accused are entitled to have their case transferred to another district; A. Therefore this is a sufficient ground for transfer of the case. (Agha Haidar, J.) FAKIR MOHAMMAD v. EMPEROR.

—S. 526—Grounds—Communal feeling.

—Principle explained.

In cases of transfer where communal interest are involved a transfer should be granted with considerable hesitation. In such cases the matter is not to be decided in the abstract whether a certain Magistrate would deal with a matter impartially or not. The question always would be whether through some error or unfortunate accident the Magistrate has behaved in a way to give legitimate ground for fear to one party or the other. Where certain Mahomedans were prosecuted by the police out of several against whom a complaint was made by Hindus and the Magistrate who was a Hindu ordered the prosecution without waiting for the report of the police inquiry and the Magistrate delayed and ultimately refused the application of the accused copies of statements made before the police and also conducted a local inquiry.

—S. 526—Grounds—Favour.

—Failure of Magistrate to discharge functions under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, judicially.

The Court alone is authorized to examine the accused person and the counsel for the complainant or the prosecution should not be allowed to take part in the examination. Under S. 342 the questions should not be put so as to cross-examine the accused or with a view to elicit from him statements which would lead to his conviction. Further it is of the utmost importance in a criminal case that the trying Magistrate should keep himself at arm's length from both sides and should try to hold the scales even between them. He should not conduct the proceedings in such a manner as to give an impression that he is being guided by one side or the other. Where a Magistrate does not discharge these statutory functions under S. 342 in a judicial manner and acts as the mouthpiece of the Public Prosecutor in conducting the examination of the accused that is a valid ground for the transfer of the case from his Court. —Circumstances causing apprehension in accused's mind that he will not have fair trial described.

A case was started against the accused under S. 377, on an incomplete chalan. The accused applied, as soon as the case was called, under S. 344, Cr. P. Code. for adjournment on the ground that he had been served only three hours before, that he wanted time to get copies of the statements made by witnesses to the police or before Magistrate under S. 164, and that this leading counsel was out of station on account of the Muharram holidays. This application was rejected by the Court on the ground that another advocate was present in Court on behalf of the petitioner. The accused then presented another application under S. 526 (8) stating that he intended to apply for the transfer of the case from the Magistrate's Court and praying that the case be adjourned to enable him to do so. The Magistrate rejected the application assuming that the accused wanted to apply under S. 528. In the course of the trial which then commenced, the first and important witness in respect of whom the offence was alleged to be committed stated that he made the allegations against the accused at the instance of a person, who was alleged to be a bitter enemy of the accused, that his previous statement before a Magistrate was made under pressure. A complaint was made against this witness by the Magistrate under S. 476, Cr. P. Code. The next witness was then called, but he did not give any direct evidence against the accused. Though at least one other witness for the prosecution was present in Court, the Magistrate did not examine him but passed an order adjourning the case on the ground that he had "lot of treasury work to do." The accused then moved the High Court for transfer of the case and an ad interim order was passed staying further proceedings.

Held, that all the above incidents would necessitate the transfer of the case to another Court. A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 361. In re McCarthy, (1924) 1 K. B. 256 and A.I.

Section 556 is based on the maxim nemo debet esse iudex in propria causa. The expression "a party or personally interested" implies that a direct personal pecuniary interest, however small in the result of the case, disqualifies a Judge, Magistrate or Justice from trying a case, but where such interest is not pecuniary the disqualifying interest should have substantially the same effect so as to create a reasonable suspicion of bias. The mere possibility of a bias is, however, not enough. Where the only interest in the result of a case tried by a Magistrate is that he is concerned in it in his

If a Magistrate convicts an accused on a minor charge when he should have committed him to Sessions on a graver charge, there is a remedy provided by the law, but it would be a very dangerous thing for the High Court to interfere in a pending case and transfer it from the Court which is seised of it because the Court during the hearing of the case takes a particular view of the law or the facts.

In a charge under S. 304, I. P. C., which is instituted on a police report and in which the prosecution is in the hands of the Public Prosecutor, exceptionally strong grounds would have to be shown before the High Court would exercise its power of transfer at the instance of a private complainant when the responsible authorities are satisfied that there is no ground for withdrawing the case from the Court which is hearing it. —Inherent power—High Court has no power apart from S. 526.

The High Court's powers of revision are in express terms limited to those conferred by certain sections mentioned in S. 439. S. 526 is not one of these. The Letters Patent does not confer any power of transfer over and above that conferred by S. 526 since cl. 28 is qualified by cl. 36. (May Oung, J.) ASHU v. MG. PO KHAN. 1 Rang. 632 = 2 Bur. L. —Only the Court.

Since 1923 proceedings under S. 476, Cr. P. Code are taken only by the Court in the interest of justice when it thinks fit to do so. It is not now open to a private person to take proceedings after taking the sanction of the Court under S. 195. A private person may move the Court but it is for the Court to decide whether to take action and initiate the proceedings. A person moving the Court to take action under S. 476 cannot therefore be considered to be an interested person within the meaning of S. 526 (3) and also has no locus standi to apply for the transfer of a case, the Court being the "complainant." "A party interested" in S. 526 (3) does not necessarily mean a complainant, i.e., a person presenting a 'complaint' as defined in S. 4 (h), but may include a police informant. Moreover, where the conduct of a case is in the hands of a Public Prosecutor and where there is a conflict between the Public Prosecutor and "the party interested" the right of the former must prevail; because it is the Public Prosecutor, and not the informant, who is primarily responsible for the conduct of the case. The Magistrate who tried the case was transferred when most of the witnesses had been examined. The succeeding Magistrate granted a de novo trial. After this, District Magistrate transferred the case to the previous Magistrate who had been transferred, on the ground that the small amount of work that remained to be done could best be done by the same Magistrate who had tried the case so far and that to transfer the case to him was, therefore preferable to the whole case being heard again by a new Magistrate.

—S. 528-A—Procedure on claim.

—Procedure in mofussal and in Presidency Towns discussed.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 528-B—Scope and effect.

An Indian British subject to be dealt with as such must put in his claim before the Magistrate before whom he is brought for the purpose of enquiry or trial. This applies to Presidency Magistrates as well as Magistrates in the mofussal. If the Magistrate rejects the claim and tries him, the decision shall, form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such appeal. This applies to Presidency Magistrates as well as to Magistrates in the mofussal. If the Magistrate rejects the claim and commits him to the Court of Session, he may repeat the claim before the said Court. Such repetition may only be made in a Court of Session and not the High Court exercising Original Criminal Jurisdiction. If the Court of Session rejects the claim and tries him, the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such trial. It necessarily follows that if a claim is made before a Presidency Magistrate and rejected by him and the accused is committed to the High Court, there is no provision for repetition of the claim before the High Court, and the accused will not be entitled to put in, under S. 275 of the Cr. P. Code, before the High Court, a further claim for being tried by a jury the majority of whom should be Indians. Where no such claim is put forward before a Magistrate, there being no provision for repetition of the claim before the High Court, S. 528-B, is a bar to the assertion of the same in any subsequent stage of the case. ## —S. 528-A—Time for making claim.

—Accused must claim his right before Magistrate —If not, he is barred from raising it subsequently.

It is a condition precedent to the determination of the status of an accused person that he should assert his right to be tried as a person belonging to a particular nationality before the Magistrate to whom he is sent up for trial. It is the assertion of that claim which gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate to inquire into the matter and to give a finding thereon, which, if adverse to the accused, may be challenged in the subsequent proceedings. But if the accused has failed to assert the plea at the proper time, the provisions of S. 528-B in express terms prevent him from asserting it in any subsequent stage of the case. Per Walmsley, J.—The omission of the accused person to avail himself of the right to claim the benefit of S. 528-A does not conclude the matter and he is not debarred from urging that the considerations mentioned in cls. (a) or (b) of S. 443 exist.

Per Mukerji, J.—A claim to be tried under the provisions of Chapter 33 of the Code is wholly different from a claim to be tried as an European British subject or an Indian British subject or an European not being an European British subject or an American. It is the latter claim only which is dealt with in Chapter 44 of the Code in which S. 528-A and 528-B occur and so far as the former claim is concerned the questions of status of the claimant does not always arise as is evident from the provisions of S. 443 (1)(b) of the Code. Consequently Ss. 528 A and 528 B can have no application to S. 449 under which the right of appeal is claimed in Ch. 33. *Emperor v. Harendra Chandra Chakravarti, Foll. ## CR. P. CODE (1898),

—S. 530—Offences within and without jurisdiction.
 —Magistrate—Ignoring circumstances of aggravation so that the offence may be within the jurisdiction—Improper but not void.

Where the facts disclose an offence within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate it is a fallacy to say that he is not empowered by law to try the person charged for the offence which is within his jurisdiction because the facts disclose a more serious offence which is beyond his jurisdiction. He is expressly so empowered. Whether in so doing he adopts a proper course is another question. No doubt it is improper on the part of a Magistrate to intentionally ignore circumstances of aggravation which show that an offence beyond his jurisdiction was in fact committed as well as an offence within his jurisdiction, as, for instance, if a second class Magistrate should ignore the violence used in committing theft (S. 379), instead of sending the accused before a first class Magistrate to be tried for robbery (S. 392). Here the action of the second Class Magistrate would be improper, but his proceedings would not be void. 25 Mad. 61 (P. C.), Dist. (Brown, J.) DAWSON v. EMPEROR.

—S. 533—Appeal.

—Conviction on a report of an Excise Analyst—Report inadmissible—Appellate Court can order examination of the Excise Analyst as a witness—Judge acting on the admission of the pleader for accused—Procedure is merely irregular and S. 537 would apply.

In a trial of an offence under S. 43 (1) (a) of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, the report of the Excise Analyst that one bottle which had been sent to him contained cocaine and that some other things contained no cocaine, was tendered in evidence, and upon this evidence the accused was convicted. On appeal, the Sessions Judge held that the report of the Excise Analyst was inadmissible in evidence and, therefore, proposed to have the Excise Analyst examined under S. 428, Criminal P. Code. Upon this the pleader for the accused stated that he did not want to challenge the genuineness or the correctness of the certificate, and that he was prepared to admit that the powder in the bottle sent to the Excise Analyst was cocaine. The Sessions Judge acted upon this statement.

Held, that even assuming that the Judge should not have acted upon the admission of the pleader of the accused, the case was one of mere irregularity, which had not caused a failure of justice and which, therefore, could be properly held to fall under S. 537, Cr. P. Code.

Held, further, that this was a case where the provisions of S. 428, Cr. P. Code, could properly be availed of in order to have legal evidence as to the contents of the bottle.

Held, further, that the Sessions Judge could legally act upon the admission of the applicant's pleader in the appeal.

—Principle explained.

Though S. 164 lays down that no Magistrate shall record any confession unless, upon questioning the person making it, he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily, still it is nowhere laid down that the Magistrate shall record any note showing what questions he has put to the person and how he has satisfied himself that the confession is made voluntarily. But it is advisable that the Magistrate should always record a memorandum showing that he has, by questioning the person making it, satisfied himself that the confession is made voluntarily. The footnote to the recorded confession was as follows:—"The statement was written in my presence and hearing. It was read over to the accused, and he admitted it to be correct. It contains a true and full account of the statement made by him."

Held, that the footnote complied with the provisions of S. 164 before it was amended by the Act of 1923 though not with the new provisions which had been added in 1923. As the Magistrate, however, had under the provisions of S. 533 been duly called as a witness and examined, and his evidence showed that he had in fact complied with the provisions of law, the document in which the confession was recorded was fit to be admitted in evidence. —S. 533—Defective footnote.*—Presumption under principle explained.

If, when a document is tendered in evidence at a trial purporting to be a confession of the accused, it is found to contain the memorandum required by S. 164 (3), a presumption arises under S. 80 of the Evidence Act that all the necessary formalities purporting to have been performed have in fact been performed and the document is admissible in evidence without further proof. If, however, the said memorandum does not appear or is defective, the document is inadmissible unless the defect can be cured by the examination of the Magistrate who recorded it, under S. 533. The provisions of S. 164 (3) render it incumbent on a Magistrate who is called on to record a confession to explain to the person who is to make it that he is not bound to make a confession at all, and that if he does so it may be used as evidence against him. Further the Magistrate should only record the confession if upon examination of the person making it, he has reason to believe that it will be made voluntarily. Where the memorandum at the foot of confession recorded does not conform with the form as laid down, the defect is curable if it is of form and not of substance. If as a matter of fact the statement was duly recorded, that is to say, after the required explanation had been given, but the Magistrate had failed to embody that fact in the certificate, such a defect would be curable. If the explanation had not in fact been made the statement could not be held to have been "duly made" and S. 533 cannot be appealed to. (Broadway and Addison, J.J.) PARTAP SINGH v. EMPEROR.

—S. 533—Interpretation.

—Operation of saving clause in S. 533 is to cure want of proper certificate by Magistrate.

The words "notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act, 1872, S. 91" indicate that a confession must in every case be recorded in the first instance; but S. 533 is by its terms confined to confessions or statements recorded under S. 164 or S. 364 of the Code. Moreover, the words "notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act, 1872, S. 91" so far as they apply to S. 164 really are intended to make the oral testimony of the Magistrate admissible to prove the fact that notwithstanding the absence of a certificate that he complied with the provisions of that section, he did as a matter of fact comply with such provision. The operation of this saving clause is therefore intended to cure the defect of want of proper certificate by the Magistrate. (Jai Lal and Currie, J.J.) JOG RAJ v. EMPEROR.

—S. 533—Writing questions and answers

—Magistrate failing to write questions and answers as required by S. 364—Defect is curable.

Section 533 applies not only to omissions to comply with the provisions of law but also to infractions of the law.

Where a Magistrate while recording a confession of the accused fails to reduce into writing the questions and answers as required by S. 364, the defect is curable under S. 533 by examining the Magistrate as a witness provided no injury is caused to the accused as to his defence on the merits. Further the confession recorded by the Magistrate is itself admissible because the expression "such statement" in S. 533 refers to statement regarding which the Magistrate is called to give evidence. 21 Bom. 495; 23 Bom. 221; 9 Mad. 224, A. —Offence under S. 415—His mere surplussage to state in charge that any person suffered loss as a result of misrepresentation and such defect curable.

F borrowed money from M on security of N, on basis of two mortgage bonds and having arranged to sell the mortgaged property induced M to accompany him to a petition writer to get a sale-deed drafted. The bonds were left with the petition-writer and M went away to get a document registered. N and F making a false representation to petition-writer that M wanted to see to the bonds, took them away. F and N were followed, but the bonds could not be recovered. In the charge it was recited that F and N obtained the bonds after making false representation to the petition-writer and that as a result of the misrepresentation, M suffered loss. It was contended that the charge was defective.

Held, that it was not necessary to state in the charge that a result of false representation made by F and N, M suffered any loss. The mere fact that the petition writer as a result of the deception of N handed the bond to him was sufficient to bring his conduct within the definition of cheating. The addition in the charge that M suffered loss as a result of the misrepresentation was a mere surplussage and the defect was cured by S. 537, Cr. P. Code. (Jai Lal, J.) FATEH HAIDAR v. S. 149 creates no offence but is like S. 34 merely declaratory of a principle of the common law and its object is to make it clear that an accused who comes within that section cannot put forward as a defence that it was not his hand which inflicted the grievous hurt. A person cannot be tried and sentenced under S. 149 alone, no punishment being provided by the section. Therefore the omission of S. 149 from a charge does not create an illegality by reason of S. 233, Criminal Procedure Code which provides that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge. —Real charge understood—No prejudice.

Where it was intended to allege one general conspiracy to commit an offence or offences under S. 420 of the Indian Penal Code by cheating the Government of India of large sums of money and the transactions in linseed oil, turpentine and water-soluble oil, were overt acts from which the conspiracy might be inferred and this was explained to the Counsel who appeared for the accused at different periods of the trial and the accused fully understood the charge.

Held, that although the allegations amounted to charges of three different conspiracies it was not a bad charge as the accused knew what the charge was. The mere fact of there being three letters in respect of the three articles is not inconsistent with the existence of one general conspiracy. The fact that there were many transactions intervening between the dates of the three matters alleged as overt acts by the prosecution, and that it was proved that such transactions were fraudulent or dishonest is not inconsistent with the existence of one general conspiracy. Although the charge should have contained an allegation of the person or persons who were alleged to have been deceived and induced to issue the cheque the omission should not be regarded as a fatal defect in the charge, where the accused were not misled and there was no failure of justice by reason of the omission of the above-named particulars from the charge. Where objection was taken to the charge of cheating the Government of India by inducing them to deliver a cheque for Rs. 59,265 in payment of five bills that the five bills therein referred to were presented at different dates, and that if any offence was committed by the appellants in respect of the bills, there were five separate offences of cheating and five separate offences could not be included in one charge.

Held, the offence charged under S. 420, Indian Penal Code, would not be complete until the Government of India, being induced thereto by the alleged fraudulent bills, delivered the cheque for Rs. 59,265. Until the last of the five bills was delivered the inducement was not complete, and until the cheque was issued the offence under S. 420, Indian Penal Code, was not complete.

—Wrong Section mentioned in Summons—Accused approved of correct Section before trial—No material.

Where in the Summons by mistake a wrong section is mentioned as the provision of law under which the accused was prosecuted, but where the Magistrate told the accused when he appeared in answer to the summons, the correct section under which he was being prosecuted, the accused is aware of the case he has to meet and there is no such material irregularity as to justify the quashing of conviction. —In a trial of an offence under S. 43 (1) (a) of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, the report of the Excise Analyst that one bottle which had been sent to him contained cocaine and that some other things contained no cocaine, was tendered in evidence and upon this evidence the accused was convicted. On appeal the Sessions Judge held that the report of the Excise Analyst was inadmissible in evidence and therefore, proposed to have the Excise Analyst examined under S. 428, Cr. P. Code. Upon this the pleader for the accused stated that he did not want to challenge the genuineness or the correctness of the certificate, and that he was prepared to admit that the powder in the bottle sent to the Excise Analyst was cocaine. The Sessions Judge acted upon this statement. Held, that even if the admission could not be legally acted on, the irregularity did not vitiate the trial. —The tests to be applied in considering whether a particular infringement of the provision of the Cr. P. Code is one which does or does not come within the purview of S. 537 are; Does the error go to the whole root of the trial? Does it in effect vitiate the proceedings? Has the Court assumed an authority which it does not possess? If the error is of such a nature, the proceedings are vitiated in their very inception and S. 537 has no application. But the mere fact that a certain provision of the Code is imperative does not in itself indicate that a breach of the provision vitiates the whole proceedings. A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 258, Foll.

Per Doyle, J.—Mandatory directions may be either imperative or directory. They deal either with what shall or with what shall not be done. It is possible to have degrees of disobedience of positive but of prohibitory directions. Prohibitory directions offer very little difficulty since disobedience amounts nearly always to an illegality. In considering positive directions, it must be remembered that the distinction between simple irregularities and illegalities is one not of degree, but of essence. If therefore the disobedience of a mandatory injunction is measurable, so to speak, quantitatively, and, if a minor infringement of that mandatory injunction which does not go to the root of a trial may be admitted, a general infringement of the same nature constitutes an irregularity which may necessitate the annulment of the particular trial, but is not an illegality incurable under S. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. —Defects in procedure even in contravention of positive enactments are curable.

A positive enactment by the Code that a certain trial shall not take place is obviously a very different thing from a positive enactment that in the course of such a trial certain detailed procedure shall be followed. In the one case an infringement of the enactment amounts to an assumption of jurisdiction and vitiates the trial from the very beginning. In the other case an infringement merely amounts to an error, omission or irregularity in the procedure adopted in the course of the trial. S. 537 of the Code aims at curing infringements of the latter type. 25 Mad. 61 (P. C.), Expl. If the error is of the former nature, the proceedings are vitiated in their very inception, and S. 537 has no application. But the mere fact that a certain provision of the Code is imperative does not in itself indicate that a breach of that provision vitiates the whole proceedings. (Brown, J.) NGA HLA U v. The provision that the accused should be asked whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on a date subsequent to that upon which he is called upon to plead to the charge, inserted in S. 256 by the amending Act of 1923 by words "at the commencement of the next hearing," is obviously intended to give the accused an interval of time to think out the lines of his defence before he is called upon to inform the Court how he intends to proceed and an omission of this new procedure is an irregularity which vitiates the whole trial. 7 L. that, a considerable number of the other prosecution witnesses were recalled and cross-examined. Subsequently the defence witnesses were examined but the accused was not examined again and a judgment was passed against him.

Held, that the provisions of S. 342 were not obeyed as that section would require the accused to be re-examined when the prosecution witnesses had been recalled and cross-examined and to be further examined after two fresh Crown witnesses had been examined.

Held further, that such violation if it did not lead to a failure of justice would not vitiate the proceedings and is a mere irregularity which could be cured under S. 537. A. I. —S. 342 applies to summons cases—Provisions are mandatory—Non-compliance is not curable.

Section 342 applies even in summons cases. The initial statement of the accused in such cases under S. 242 when he is called upon to show cause under S. 243 before evidence is led does not dispense with the necessity for the examination by the Court and the statement by the accused under S. 342 at the close of the evidence for the prosecution, in explanation of the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. The omission is a violation of the express procedure ensuring an essential right of the accused person and is not an irregularity curable under S. 537. A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 290 and 5 P. L. One of the witnesses, in answer to a question put in cross-examination, said that the reason why information was not given to the police immediately after the occurrence although the police station was only a short distance away from the scene of occurrence was that the persons who had committed the offence were then unknown. The Judge then told the foreman of the jury to put the question in another form to the witness and the witness said that he and others had recognized the appellants at the place of occurrence and seen them running away. The Judge said to the jury in his charge "as to this particular witness he had no doubt said in answer to an invalid question from the pleader for the defence which was repeated by me that the culprits could not be ascertained that night. If you think that he gave the answer after understanding the question, there is an end of the case for prosecution and the accused should be forthwith acquitted. If on the other hand you think that he did not understand the question you are to consider what he had stated before and what he said later on in answer to foreman's question." The Judge did not record anything from which it could be inferred that the witness did not understand the question put to him.

What a Court of appeal has to consider is whether the reception of inadmissible evidence influenced the minds of the jury so seriously as to lead them to a conclusion which might have been different but for its reception. Hence where inadmissible evidence has been admitted, there are two points for consideration firstly whether the reception of the inadmissible evidence has in fact occasioned a failure of justice, and secondly whether if it is excluded there was sufficient evidence to justify the verdict of the jury. —Written address of counsel—Propriety of.

In matters where counsel on behalf of accused is entitled to be heard, he is entitled generally to be heard by an oral address and not by written speech. Written addresses filed by counsels do not stand higher than notes of counsels' arguments taken down by the Magistrate and cannot form part of the record. No doubt address of counsel is a valuable right which every party accused of crime who engages counsel to defend him is entitled to regard as such. But if the Magistrate asks the counsel to write out his address in lieu of addressing him it constitutes not an illegality or nullity but only an irregularity which might be waived. The right to address the Magistrate on the case is for the benefit of —Criminal trial—Effective hearing—Last opportunity.

The right of counsel in criminal matters is not only that they shall be heard, but that they shall be given an opportunity of being effectually heard. Where counsel on behalf of his client has the right of being heard last (where the accused has not called any evidence on his behalf) in the matter, counsel is entitled to an opportunity to be so heard. If an accused is heard in such a case, the mere fact that he was not heard last is not an illegality which would vitiate the trial but is merely an irregularity to which provisions of S. 537, Cr. P. Code, would apply. (Mirza and Patkar, J.J.) VINAYAK LAXMAN BHATKHANDE v. EMPEROR.

—Two factions — Two distinct trials—Evidence similar—Disposal in one judgment by appellate Court caused no injustice and hence should be upheld.

Two parties were charged for their attacks on each other in the same occurrence, and the charges were tried separately at two distinct trials. The evidence given for the prosecution was similar to a substantial extent in each case. Each party was a witness against the other but there was also independent evidence. Although they were tried separately, the High Court gave one judgment, but treated the cases as two cases which have been separately tried. There was, however, a body of separate evidence which was applicable to each case, and that in itself was enough for the conviction.

Held, that, although technical it might have been better to keep the evidence entirely distinct and to have delivered two separate judgments, no injustice has followed from what was done. (Viscount Haldane.) MADAT KHAN v. KING-EMPEROR.

—Where in a certain village there were two separate riots, intimately connected with one another and two cross cases were started, the magistrate heard them together, the pleaders were the same who freely referred to the evidence in the other case, and the Court found difficulty to decide one case without depending on the evidence in the other,

Held, that a Court has no right, technically speaking, to consider at all the evidence given in one case for the purpose of reaching his conclusions in another. But if the reception of the evidence required to enable the point to be decided in the second case is merely a formal repetition of evidence, which has already been given and heard by the same tribunal and it is directed to the same issue or issues of fact, its vain repetition may be reasonably waived. If the parties for their own convenience and other obvious motives, consent to treat the evidence in the former case as though it had been repeated in the latter case, such evidence is by implication and for all practical purposes brought on to the record of the second case, although not actually recorded. Therefore, although technically it might have been better to keep the evidence of the two cases entirely distinct and to have delivered two separate judgments, no injustice followed from its not keeping so: 20 Cal. 537; A. —Investigation by Sub-Inspector where it should have been by an Inspector—Irregularity is curable.

A conviction or acquittal does not depend upon the question what particular officer actually conducts the investigation which results in his trial. That is determined mainly by the evidence that is given at the trial and considered; and the question whether that evidence has, in the first place, been elicited by an Inspector or by a Sub-Inspector is of very minor importance and does not really affect the result of a trial, except to this extent that the theory is that the higher the rank of the police officer investigating, the more careful and unimpeachable his enquiry is likely to be. Therefore, an irregularity occasioned by a Sub-Inspector investigating into an offence, while investigation should have been made by an Inspector, is curable by S. 537. A proposition that failure to strictly comply with the provisions of S. 360 will under any circumstances vitiate a trial, no matter whether it has caused a failure of justice or not, is too broad. Failure to strictly comply with the provision of S. 360 should be considered as a mere irregularity curable by S. 537 if no prejudice is caused. Each case should be decided on its own merits. It is not so much the recording of the reasons as the adequacy thereof which should count in the determination of the question if the provisions of S. 256, have been complied with. ## —S. 537—Rejection of complaint.

—Though order of remand is illegal is covered by S. 537.

There is nothing in the Code which lays down that once a Magistrate declines under S. 476 to file a complaint he is functus officio, or that a complaint subsequently filed by him confers no jurisdiction to deal with the person complained against. A refusal by the Magistrate under S. 476, to file a complaint against an accused person does not attract the applicability of the doctrine of autre fois acquit enunciated by S. 403. Nor does it amount to judgment within the meaning of Ss. 366 and 369 which may not therefore subsequently reviewed. Where an application under S. 476 for prosecution of a person is rejected, but on appeal the appellate Court purporting to act under S. 476 (b) remands the proceedings for further enquiry which results in the complaint being filed against the person, and his conviction, the procedure followed is in strict conformity with the Code,

—S. 537—Scope.

S. 537 may be taken to cover any irregularity in the widest sense of that term, provided there has been no failure of justice. The appellate Court ought not to order a re-trial in a case where provisions of S. 361 are overlooked without satisfying itself whether or no a failure of justice has been occasioned. A.I.R. 1927 P. Section 537 does not cover cases of the illegality of the trial. A Magistrate held that certain accused could not be tried jointly and professing to hold separate charges he framed separate charges. However, main evidence had been already recorded and he disposed of the cases by writing one judgment.

Held, that procedure amounted to an illegality which could not be cured under S. 537. (Jas Lal, J.) SANDAGAR SINGH v. EMPEROR.

—Not a curable irregularity.

Before a complaint under S. 476 is made, it is necessary that a Court which thinks that an offence mentioned in S. 195, sub-S. (1), Cl. (b) or Cl. (c) has been committed should record a finding to that effect and, after recording such finding, may make a complaint. The provision to record a finding is not merely directory but it is mandatory. When the section of the Code requires a certain thing to be done, it is not open to the Court to say that it is optional for a Court to do it or not, and therefore, failure by the Court to record a finding is not irregularity curable by S. 537. S. 537 applies only to mere errors of procedure arising out of mere inadvertence, and not to substantive errors of law, and that section does not apply to cases of disregard or disobedience of mandatory provisions of the Code. The section has not the effect of curing material irregularities and absolute illegalities. The failure of a Magistrate to follow the procedure enjoined by S. 137 (1) vitiates his order, and is not a mere irregularity of the nature contemplated by S. 537 (a). 25 Mad. 61, Foll. —S. 537—Verdict of jury.

—Jury returning verdict of guilty in respect of minor offence—Verdict of jury is right and is covered by S. 537 (a).

An accused was convicted by a jury of an offence under S. 325, I.P.C., and the verdict of the jury was accepted by the Sessions Judge. It was contended that the Judge used the jury as assessors in accepting the verdict for an offence with which the accused was not specifically charged and that therefore the High Court could go into the facts as if the verdict amounted to an opinion of the assessors.

Held, that the effect of S. 238, Cr. P. Code, was to invest a jury trying an offence under S. 307, I. P. C., with authority to find that the facts proved only constitute a minor offence and to return a verdict of guilty of such offence. It cannot be disputed that, in view of the charge under S. 307, I.P.C., the fact that no charge under S. 325 was framed is not even a defect or irregularity and, as such, curable under S. 537 (a), Cr. P. Code, for the simple reason that, under S. 238 (1) Cr. P. Code, the accused was liable, without separate charge, to be convicted incidentally of the minor offence under S. 325, I.P.C. The High Court could not interfere and go into the question of facts on which the jury delivered the verdict they did. 26 Mad. 243, Ayyangar, J., Foll. (Findlay, J.C.) NARAYAN SINGH v. ## —S. 540—Exercise of discretion.

Discretion should be exercised by the Magistrate with a great deal of caution.

The discretion given to Magistrate under S. 540 has to be exercised with a great deal of caution. Where after the defence was closed and arguments were heard the Magistrate felt on the records as they stood that some points had been left obscure and in order to elucidate them it was necessary to recall certain witnesses and to examine a new witness, and when this evidence had been recorded, he took the precaution of asking the accused if he wanted to add anything to his previous statement and on his replying in the negative he heard further arguments and then proceeded to decide the case.

Held, that there was no illegality in the procedure adopted nor had the petitioner been prejudiced in any way by it. 75 I. C. 541, Rel. on; A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 104 and A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 531, Dist. (Tek Chand, J.) MANGAT RAI v. EMPEROR. 110 I. C. 676=

Where after, the case for the defence is closed, the prosecution offers to give rebutting evidence to falsify the case for the defence, and it is found that the prosecution could not possibly offer that evidence at any earlier stage, fresh rebutting evidence should be admitted. The second part of the section is imperative. If the new evidence appears to the Court essential to the just decision of the case, the Court has no choice but is bound to take the evidence. Where the accused is not represented by a pleader and is unable to attend personally, being ill, the Court cannot proceed with the case by assigning him a pleader, for such a counsel is neither chosen by him nor given to him with his express or implied consent and in fact does not really represent him and no Court has any authority to force upon a prisoner the services of a counsel if he is unwilling to accept them. The employment of a counsel places him in a confidential position which, of course, will not exist in the case of a pleader, assigned without the accused's consent. Moreover, the pleader might advance a defence which the accused would never have made and yet for which he must be responsible. Reg v. Yscuado, 6 Cox C. C. 386 Ref. (*Shadi Lal, C. CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 544—Private prosecutions.

In private prosecution the complainant must pay the reasonable expenses of the witnesses, although it is open to the Local Government to make rules which would permit, in certain cases, the liability to be transferred to the Crown. The payment in respect of diet money and travelling expenses fall under the head of "other fees payable" and the Court has a perfect right to insist upon those fees being paid in advance before the processes are issued, and to refuse to issue process for the attendance of witnesses unless the travelling expenses and diet money of such witnesses have been deposited by the complainant in advance. —Appeal—Notice should be given to complainant where compensation has been awarded to him.

Though there is no express provision of law in case of an order under S. 250 or S. 545, Cr. P. Code with regard to notice upon the opposite party, one of the fundamental principles of law is that no order should be passed to the detriment or prejudice of a party without giving him an opportunity of being heard in defence, and therefore a Court hearing the appeal would be exercising proper discretion to give notice to the complainant, who has been awarded compensation, of the hearing of the appeal. —S. 556—Construction and scope.

—“A party or personally interested” imply direct personal pecuniary interest—The mere fact that a certain order of the Magistrate passed as Executive Officer is likely to be challenged is not sufficient ground for transfer.

A Magistrate is not disqualified by S. 556 from trying a case based on a private complaint and which has not been filed under his direction or sanction merely and solely on the ground that the validity of certain orders passed by him in his capacity as an executive or as a Revenue Officer is directly put in issue in the case and that the innocence or the guilt of the accused considerably depends on the effect of such orders. This section is based on the maxim nemo debet esse iudex in propria causa. The expression “a party or personally interested” implies that a direct personal pecuniary interest, however small in the result of the case, disqualifies a Judge, Magistrate or Justice from trying a case, but where such interest is not pecuniary the disqualifying interest should have substantially the same effect so as to create a reasonable suspicion of bias. The mere possibility of a bias is, however, not enough. Where the only interest in the result of a case tried by a Magistrate is that he is concerned in it in his public capacity it may fairly be presumed that his interest is not so substantial as to warrant the inference that he is likely to have a real bias in the the matter. If in addition to his being so interested there are other circumstances to suggest the real likelihood of a bias, it is another matter. English Case-law referred to. (*Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. Section 561-A declares the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice and if to secure the ends of justice, it appears to be necessary to expunge any matter from the judgment of a criminal Court, then the High Court has power to do so. Principles which govern the action of High Courts in such a case are these, if an unjustifiable attack be made on a person who has had no opportunity of being heard in his own defence, and the remark is irrelevant and separable it can and should be expunged especially if he is neither a party nor a witness. But it is not proper to delete them unless they are separable, that is to say, if they form an integral part of the argument. A Judge or Magistrate is bound to record reasons for his decision and even in the interest of justice, the High Court cannot delete those reasons and leave the decision without its reasoned basis. Unless the remarks are irrelevant or can be expunged without ruining the argument, the High Court cannot legitimately interfere. A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 392 and A. I. R. 1927 All. 193, Dist.; A. I. —High Court can expunge objectionable remarks in lower Court's judgment—The power should be sparingly used—Court should not make remarks against a person who has no chance to explain his conduct.

The High Court has power to expunge passages from judgments delivered by itself or by a Subordinate Court but this jurisdiction is of an extraordinary nature and has to be exercised with great care and caution. On the one hand it has to be borne in mind that in weighing evidence and arriving at conclusions on questions of fact, lower Courts have to review the conduct of witnesses with reference to particular incidents and at times have to adjudge generally on the veracity or otherwise of such persons and in doing so they have often to make remarks which reflect adversely on their character. It is of the utmost importance to the administration of justice that Courts should be allowed to perform their functions freely and fearlessly and without undue interference by the High Court. At the same time it is equally necessary that the right of Magistrates to make disparaging remarks on persons who appear, or are named, in the course of a trial, is one that should be exercised with great reserve and moderation, especially where the person disparaged has had little or no opportunity of explaining or defending himself. If the conduct of the witness appears to the Judge to be suspicious or otherwise not above board, he has the right and the duty to test his evidence by putting questions to him. But before he is justified in commenting adversely upon his evidence he must establish the particular fact warranting such criticism by proper evidence in Court and not on conjectures or by reference to materials which are not properly on the record. Again, a Magistrate should not in his judgment make observations prejudicial to the character of person, who is neither a witness nor a party to the proceedings and who has no opportunity of being heard. A. —High Court has inherent power to order a deletion of passages, which are either irrelevant or inadmissible and which adversely affect the character of persons before the Court. The High Court, as the Supreme Court of revision, must be deemed to have power to see that Courts below do not unjustly and without any lawful excuse take away the character of a party or of a witness or of a counsel before it. Such jurisdiction, however, can only be exercised when there is no foundation whatsoever for the remark objected to and not —Power should be exercised sparingly.

Section 561-A recognizes the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. But the power to expunge a portion of a judgment delivered by a competent Court, if intended for cases of exceptional circumstances and should be exercised very sparingly. —S. 562—Facts to be considered.*—Object of section explained.

S. 562 has not been enacted with the intention of letting off without imprisonment every juvenile offender on his first conviction for an offence described in the section, regardless of the circumstances in which the crime was committed. S. 562 itself is clear on this point and Magistrates, before applying the section, should carefully take into consideration the attendant circumstances, along with age, character and antecedents of the offender. There can be no manner of doubt that S. 562 has no application to the case of a youth, who grapples with another and after having been separated by others turns back with rage on his adversary, and inflicts a heavy lathi blow on him, killing him almost instantaneously, and later on speaks of his act in a spirit of truculent braggadocio threatening to kill those who attempt to arrest him. If such a person were to be released on probation, the very object with which this salutary provision of the law was enacted would be defeated, and an impression created in the minds of young men that they can commit at least one serious offence with impunity. —Reformatory Schools Act—Act is intended for youthful first offenders.

The sending of first youthful offenders, whose antecedents are not shown to be bad, to ordinary jails has the effect of making them hardened criminals after they are discharged from such jails. Their association with all classes of offenders has a very unhealthy influence on them. It is the duty of the Magistrate to take into consideration all such matters, when deciding the question of sentence. There are other suitable forms of punishment provided by the law. The provisions of Reformatory Schools Act are intended for cases of youthful offenders. (Jai Lal, J.) EMPEROR v. DHARAM PARKASH. 27 Cr. L. J. 934 =

—The powers of S. 562 are not conferred upon the Magistrate for the purpose of showing favour to any particular class of persons. The sole intention of the section is that the accused person should be given a chance of reformation which he would lose being incarcerated in prison. The exercise of such discretion does need a considerable sense of responsibility in the Magistrate. It is, therefore, at least necessary in dealing with a so-called "first offender" to see that the crime he has committed does not indicate that he is rather a fortunate habitual than a true first offender. Circumstantial evidence.*Principles to be followed laid down.

The main principles to be followed in criminal cases based on circumstantial evidence are (i) the circumstances in which an inference adverse to the accused is sought to be drawn, must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt and must be clearly connected with the fact sought to be inferred therefrom, and (ii) in order to justify an inference of guilt, the circumstances from which an inference is sought to be drawn must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. 8 C. One Bhagwana was found by the police on duty wandering about in a peculiar condition. He was recently with Chajju, Chunna and Ram Gopal his companions. Of these the first two were from Bhagwan's village and the third, was a stranger who joined them during their travel to Jahazgarh. The police were informed that of two moalis or money bags placed beneath the bedding on which Bhagwana had been seen sitting when his companions went to sleep one containing Rs. 190 was missing. They were searched and Rs. 209 were found on Ram Gopal. Bhagwana was sent to the dispensary and exhibited symptoms of dhatura poisoning. The Sub-Assistant Surgeon gave him a purgative and the resultant stools were found to contain dhatura. Chhajju and Chunna in their depositions said that some laddus were offered to them and to Bhagwan by Ram Gopal and after eating these, they ate pans, bought by Ram Gopal at a shop. The pans had an intoxicating effect. Some of the laddus and mathris were found on the person of Ram Gopal, but they were reported to have shown no traces of dhatura. There was nothing wrong with Chunna and Chhajju. Ram Gopal was sent up for trial and was convicted of an offence S. 328, Penal Code, and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

The evidence which was given under the charge based upon S. 326 read with S. 149 was directly relevant to the issue under S. 326 read with S. 34. It was proved that the accused being present and armed with a deadly weapon gave an order to other persons armed with deadly weapons to assault the complainant. Although the element of an unlawful common object in the assembly as a whole which would be required to convict the accused persons under S. 326 read with S. 149 was missing, yet the accused formed an assembly within a wider assembly which smaller assembly had a common intention to cause grievous hurt and the complainant suffered injury at their hands. A Court should not convict a person of a serious crime solely and entirely upon similarity of thumb-marks or finger-prints, without any corroborative circumstances to support this evidence. The very fact of the taking of a thumb impression of an accused person for the purpose of possible manufacture of the evidence by which he could be incriminated, is in itself sufficient for setting aside the conviction upon the understanding and upon the assumption that such was not really a fair trial. There is no law by which an accused person can be either by words or by gestures or by exposing himself to certain physical treatment made to implicate himself in the crime with which he is charged. It is necessary to re-affirm the rule of practice upon which the High Court has long insisted namely that it is not expedient when an accused is on his trial on a capital charge to convict him even upon a plea of guilty entered before the trial Court itself. As a matter of practice the Court should, in its discretion put such a plea on one side and proceed to record and consider the evidence, in order to satisfy itself not merely of the guilt of accused, but of the precise nature of the offence committed and the appropriate punishment for the same. Distinction between manslaughter and murder not considered—Conviction for murder not sustainable

In the judgement of the lower Court which convicted the accused of murder without the aid of a jury there was not the slightest enquiry into whether, assuming that the shot which resulted in the death of the deceased was fired by the accused, the act amounted to manslaughter and not murder. There was no attempt to face the question of whether the standard of proof required to prove murder as against manslaughter had in the case been reached.

—Evidence of handwriting expert—Conviction solely on.

A court ought not to accept blindly the evidence of a handwriting expert and should usually require substantial corroboration before making it the basis of conviction. —First information report—Value of—In conflict with story in the witness box—Conviction based on the report bad.

First information report is not substantive evidence of the facts recorded in them and a conviction cannot be based on such reports. They can be used to corroborate the witnesses who made them and are of value showing that they told the same story at the first possible occasion. If they tell a different story in Court, the report can be used to contradict them or discredit their testimony. But it is not legitimate for a Court, when witnesses tell a different story in the witness box and contradict the report made by them, to discard the evidence given on oath and to rely on the report. —Conviction—When sound.

—Offence under general and special law—Prosecution under special law—Exceptions to the rule—Sustainability of conviction under general law.

The proposition, that where a particular set of acts or omissions constitute an offence under the general law and also under a special law the prosecution should be under the special law is confined to cases where the offences are coincident or are practically so. Where the accused was shown to have sent blank papers in an insured cover addressed to himself and claimed the value of currency notes from the Post Office and proceedings were instituted against him for offences under Ss. 420 and 511, I. P. C., and under S. 64 of the Post Office Act and he was convicted for offences under the Penal Code. Held, that, assuming that the minor offence under S. 64 of the Post Office Act was proved, it was not illegal to convict the accused for the major offence only. Where in a trial for the offence of rioting the appellate Court refused to believe part of the prosecution story as to theft and house-breaking but gave sufficient reasons for believing the story of rioting,

In a trial of cross-cases of rioting, after some witnesses were examined in the case against the petitioner he prayed that the case in which he was complainant might be adjourned till the disposal of the case against him.

Where a criminal case is launched on the basis of a civil dispute between the parties it would be proper for the Magistrate to consider whether or not the case was of a civil nature and if he came to the conclusion that only a civil wrong had been committed, he should have said so and dealt with the case accordingly. If, on the other hand, he was of opinion, that a criminal offence had been committed, though he might refer to the evidence in a manner equally appropriate to civil proceedings he should not have lost sight of this fact that he was dealing with a criminal prosecution and ultimately he should have disposed of the case purely from the stand point of the criminal law. —A Sessions Judge should start his interest in a case at the very beginning of the trial and not when the time comes to write or dictate the judgment. First of all the ingredients of an offence ought to be clearly grasped and then attempts made continuously to discover whether the evidence of the complainant and that of the prosecution witnesses did satisfy those ingredients or not. When a consideration of the facts of the case and of their applicability to a particular section of the law are left to the end, a trial is bound to suffer and often a decision is arrived at in conflict with law. —Defence—Procedure.

Per Waller, J.—It is a curious conception of the duty of an advocate that he should endeavour by means of his cross-examination to fill up the gaps in the case against his client left by the ineptitude of the prosecution. (Waller and Anantakrishna Iyer, J.J.) COLLET v. EMPEROR. 1929 M. W. N. 395.

—Prima facie case proved—Accused should rebut by evidence—Not merely criticise.

When appearances are against the accused in a case and the prosecution has established prima facie the existence of incriminating circumstances, it is the duty of the defence to rebut the presumption arising from them by some tangible evidence other than by mere criticism and suggestions or untested and uncorroborated statements from the dock. (Buckland, Sukrawardy, and Cammiade, J.J.) HARI NARAYAN CHANDRA v. EMPEROR. 46 C. L. J. 368 = 29 Cr. L. J. 49 = 106 I. C. 545 = 9 A. I. Cr. R. 228 = A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 27.

—Prosecution must prove case—Accused then must rebut—Mere relying on discrepancies not enough.

It is true that the prosecution must prove their case in the first instance before the accused can be called upon to make their defence; but when evidence has once been given on oath by witnesses who profess to have seen the occurrence and who directly implicate the accused and ascribe particular acts to them, it will not avail the accused merely to rely upon a discrepancy here and a discrepancy there or upon the absence of adequate motive or on indications that there may be exaggerations in the prosecution story. They should call witnesses to prove on oath. (Mullick and Wort, J.J.) GHANSHAM SINGH v. EMPEROR. 6 Pat. 627 = 107 I. C. 305 = 29 Cr. L. J. 239 = 9 A. I. Cr. R. 460 = A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 100.

—Prima facie case made out—Accused cannot rely on infirmity of prosecution evidence or presumption of innocence.

If prima facie case is made out against the accused, he cannot rely safely on the presumption of innocence or on the infirmity of the evidence for the prosecution; and then it is open to the Court to convict him. The force of suspicious circumstances is augmented whenever the party attempts no explanation of facts which he may reasonably be presumed to be able and interested to explain. 7 S. L. R. 109, Foll. —Right of address of defence Counsel—Written address—Irregularity not illegality—Waiver of oral address.

In matters where counsel on behalf of accused is entitled to be heard, he is entitled generally to be heard by an oral address and not by written speech. Written addresses filed by counsels do not stand higher than notes of counsel's arguments taken down by the Magistrate and cannot form part of the record. No doubt address of counsel is a valuable right which every party accused of crime who engages counsel to defend him is entitled to regard as such. But if the Magistrate asks the counsel to write out his address in lieu of addressing him it constitutes not an illegality or nullity but only an irregularity which might be waived. The right to address the Magistrate on the case is for the benefit of the accused and he is entitled to waive such right and his counsel is entitled to waive it in favour of a written address. At this stage the Magistrate ordered the case to be treated as one under S. 352, I. P. C., that is to say, as a summons case and the accused were refused permission to further cross-examine the prosecution witness.

—Duty of prosecution.

—Burden on prosecution to establish charge—Suspicion not sufficient.

The onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies upon the prosecution who must prove the charge substantially as laid. The guilt of the accused must be —Previous conviction should be brought to notice at proper time.

Although there is a general duty cast on the trial Magistrate to see that all the material evidence is before the Court, still that duty cannot relieve the prosecution from what is primarily their duty to see that matters, such as previous convictions are brought definitely to the notice of the Court at the proper time. (Boys and Sen, J.J.) EMPEROR v. PREM. 115 I. C. 868 = 1929 A. L. J. 397 = 10 L. R. A. Cr. 76 = 11 A. I. Cr. R. 513 = 30 Cr. L. J. 529 = A. I. R. 1929 All. 270.

—A few only of the eye-witnesses called by prosecution—Others must be called too—Omission—Adverse inference.

The police are entitled, if they like, to rest their case on the evidence of two or three eye-witnesses but where it is obvious that there were many other people who could have come forward and given evidence in the matter but who are not called by the prosecution they should be called. Omission to do so is a circumstance against the prosecution. (Beasley, C. J. and Cornish, J.) KUMARASWAMI ASARI v. EMPEROR. 1929 M. W. N. 587.

—Ambiguity—Material facts—Must be clearly explained.

Per Anantakrishna Iyer, J.—In a prosecution for a serious offence such as under S. 304-A, I. P. C. great care ought to be taken on the side of the prosecution that nothing ambiguous is left on the records and circumstances having material bearing on the case are to be clearly explained by evidence. (Waller and Anantakrishna Iyer, J.J.) COLLETT v. EMPEROR. 1929 M. W. N. 395

—Capital case—Prosecution to lead all available evidence—Option of choosing favourable and withholding hostile evidence—Not allowed.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—In a capital case it is undoubtedly the duty of the Public Prosecutor to place before the trial Court the testimony of all available witnesses. This salubrious rule should be adhered to for the ends of justice and the prosecution should not be left the option of choosing witnesses who would support the prosecution case and withholding those who would not. Unless it is shown by facts and circumstances in the case that the witnesses were withheld because they would not tell the truth, the prosecution should not be left the option to choose. To allow such an option is to create embarrassment. The Court should have the whole of the material evidence and of all eye-witnesses whether in favour of or hostile to the prosecution so as to form its own opinion upon the entire evidence. 10 C.L.R. 161 and 42 Cal. 422, Appr. —Public prosecutor represents Crown, not police—All evidence for or against accused must be let in.

The duty of a Public Prosecutor is to represent not the police but the Crown and this duty should be discharged fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility attaching to his position. In a capital case it is the duty of the Crown to place before the Court all materials irrespective of the question as to —Positive affirmative evidence of guilt—Prosecution should give.

Undoubtedly the proof of the case against an accused must depend for its support not upon the absence or want of any explanation on the part of the accused himself, but upon the positive affirmative evidence of his guilt that is given by the Crown. —Accused cutting jhalasi from area not included in his right—Onus on prosecution to prove that accused did not cut within his area.

An area of 1100 bighas was attached and the accused cut jhalasi within that area. Prior to the date of cutting, the accused obtained delivery of possession of a portion of the attached area extending to about 345 bighas. The trial Court below assumed that, unless the petitioners proved that they cut from within the area of 345 bighas of which they got possession they must be considered to have committed theft and they were convicted of offences under Ss. 379 and 143, Penal Code.

Held, that it was for the prosecution to establish all the ingredients of the offence punishable under S. 379. The Crown ought to have shown that the petitioners were not cutting within that area of which they had obtained delivery of possession. (Macpherson, J.) TULSI MAHTO v. EMPEROR. 107 I. It is not the duty of the prosecution to suggest or to prove any motive on the part of the accused in committing an offence under Ss. 304 and 147. —Prosecution should not be allowed to change its case—Prosecution should not be allowed to file documents which defence relies on for discrediting them.

It is not open to prosecution to put forward receipts and witnesses as genuine and then at the last moment, at the time of the argument, to repudiate them all and start a new case altogether. Court should see that prosecution puts forward a real case from the beginning and sticks to it up to the end. The prosecution should not be allowed to file documents which the defence has had a chance to file for itself for the purpose of discrediting them. It amounts to this that when an accused has put forward his defence in the committing Court it is open to the prosecution to call evidence in the Sessions Court to rebut and discredit the accused's defence, before it is even known whether or not the accused intends to put forward that defence in the Sessions Court. It is in effect permitting the prosecution to call evidence in rebuttal of the accused's defence, a practice wholly unauthorised and not admitted by the Criminal Procedure Code. —Untruthful witnesses—Prosecution not bound to examine—Usual practice—Defence must cross-examine at the right time.

The prosecution is under no obligation to examine witnesses who it has reason to believe will not speak the truth. It is usual in such circumstances for the prosecution to tender such witnesses for cross-examination. The defence, however, is certainly entitled to claim that privilege but having omitted to do so they cannot be permitted to make capital of the fact that these witnesses were not cross-examined. 8 Cal. 121, held too widely stated. —Murder cases—Medical evidence must be given viva voce before the jury.

In cases of murder or of a man-slaughter it is unreasonable to expect the jury to convict if a proper exposition and explanation of the medical evidence is not given viva voce by a doctor who can deal with the matter and satisfy the jury. The jury are quite entitled to be fully satisfied. Until one has gleaned all the facts that one can get from the medical report one is not really in a position to say what parts of the other evidence can be relied upon. Where the medical evidence was not given, the High Court refused to examine or order examination of the doctor under S. 428. (Rankin, C. J. and Buckland, J.) DEBENDRA NARAYAN v. EMPEROR. 119 I. —Medical evidence—Opinion tending to two explanations—Not very important—Statement as to what he examined—More important than eye-witness's account.

It cannot be laid down as a general proposition that medical evidence is of less value than the evidence of eye-witnesses. No doubt where the medical evidence is merely an opinion of an expert on a question which may admit of two explanations it is not always of first importance. But that is not correct when what the doctor has done is to lay before the Court certain definite facts. When the doctor states what he saw as to the contents of the stomach and the food regurgitated into the larynx it requires no expert to draw conclusions from those facts. The Judge himself can in such case draw those conclusions as well as the doctor as to the cause of death. (Raza and Pullan, J.J.) DWARKA v. EMPEROR.

—Opinion recorded in a civil suit—Not substantive evidence.

The opinion of an expert which is admissible against an accused is the opinion given by him at the trial. Opinion, given for the purposes of a previous suit is not substantive evidence and when the accused has not the opportunity to cross-examine the expert regarding that opinion, its evidential value is very little. It is doubtful whether the opinion of an expert recorded for the purposes of a civil suit though proved in a criminal case is admissible at all at the latter trial. A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 622, Ref. —Motive—When material—Judge to explain proof of motive to jury—Alternative motive propounded by Judge—Legality.

Where the facts are clear and the prosecution is unable to allege and prove a motive, the question of motive is of no particular significance. But where the facts are not clear and the prosecution sets out to prove a special motive and fails it is to that extent discredited and a Judge should mention that circumstances to the jury and not suggest an alternative motive for their consideration. (Waller and Cornish, J.J.) DOKAISWAMY PILLAY v. EMPEROR. 1929 M. W. N. 946.

—Need not prove motive.

It is not at all necessary for the prosecution, in order to establish a charge of crime, to prove a motive for it, much less the adequacy of that motive. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Agha Haidar, J.) CHANDU v. EMPEROR. 29 Cr. L. J. 378=108 I. C. 370=A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 657.

—When important.

Where the broad features of the story for the prosecution as to the Act alleged to be committed by the accused may be true and manipulation in the personnel of the actors extremely easy to make and extremely difficult to refute the question of motive is of supreme importance. (Wazir Hasan, J. C., Simpson and Akworth, A. J. Cs.) SITLA BAKSH SINGH v. EMPEROR. 2 O. W. N. 931=27 Cr. L. J. 529=93 I. C. 1025=A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 120.

—Need not be proved.

It is unnecessary to prove motive when there is a clear evidence that a person has committed an offence. (Scott-Smith and Martineau, J.J.) MOHNA v. THE CROWN. 7 L. L. J. 59=26 Cr. L. J. 774=86 I. C. 406=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 328.

—Evidence—Presumptions.

—Record of rights—Presumption as to possession—Lapse of time—Effect.

The presumption of correctness, which attaches to the finally published Record of Rights, relates only to possession at the time when the record is prepared; and, even, if such presumption can be made in a criminal trial, it is clear that where there has been an interval of 10 or 12 years between the preparation of the record and the occurrence of an offence in respect of dispute arising over possession of land, any presumption arising from the record is obviously of the weakest possible description. Indeed the probative value is practically nil since all sorts of changes may obviously take place in the course of 10 or 12 years. (Graham and Lort Williams, J.J.) NAYAN MANDAL v. EMPEROR. 125 I. C. 746=31 Cr. L. J. 918=34 C. W. N. 170=1930 Cr. C. 134=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 134.

—Theft not proved—Obscure documents in accused's possession—Inference as to conspiracy—Propriety of.

Where no specific instance of theft or of receipt of stolen property is proved and the Court is asked as a result of several obscure documents found in possession of accused to infer that there has been conspiracy to commit theft, it is a dangerous thing to draw such an inference as to any such conspiracy among the accused without questioning them about the documents. 37 Cal. 467; Rel. on. —Defence not disclosed—Only alibi set up—Presumption as to guilt.

If neither in their examination before the Committing Magistrate, nor in that in the Sessions Court, accused disclose what their exact defence is to be, and they only enter on their defence of alibi, a certain presumption arises against them as to their guilt of offence. —Accused concocting evidence to prove alibi—Presumption of guilt.

The fact that the accused made an effort to connect false evidence of an alibi does not go to prove that he committed the offence charged. (Scott-Smith, J.) TABRI v. CROWN. 6 L. L. J. 326=26 Cr. L. J. 393=84 I. C. 937=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 42.

—Evidence—Procedure.

—Counter-case deposition of defence witnesses as prosecution witnesses—Filed by consent—If procedure irregular.

If in a trial Court the depositions given by defence witnesses, when examined as prosecution witnesses in the counter-case, are filed with the consent of both sides, and if these witnesses are called and examined in the presence of the accused and swear to the truth of their previous statements, which are then filed with their consent to save time, there is nothing illegal or irregular in such procedure. He attended on the date mentioned in the copy but the correct date was not even then given to him. Discrepancies were found on matters of detail in the evidence tendered by witnesses for the prosecution, the evidence in the main being consistent. No evidence in rebuttal was tendered and it was contended that the prosecution story was unsupportable.

—Disinterestedness of witness—No ground for believing as true—Weight of evidence—How appraised.

It is an elementary principle in the administration of criminal justice that want of interest in the prosecution does not by itself stamp the evidence of a witness with truth. The weight to be attached to the testimony of a witness depends in a large measure upon various considerations, e. g., if on the face of it the evidence is so much in consonance with probabilities and consistent with other evidence, and generally so fits in with the material details of the case for the prosecution as to carry conviction of truth to a prudent mind. If these elements are wanting in the testimony of a witness, however independent he may be, his evidence is worthless and should not be relied on in the decision of criminal cases where persuasion of guilt must amount to a moral —Genuineness of document—Previous evidence in civil suit of accused—Important evidence as to intention of conspiracy.

The accused in a case of forgery and conspiracy had previously given evidence in a civil Court as to the genuineness of the document.

Where the chowkidar had made a report and a person who resided in the house where the offence was committed subsequently gave a statement to the police. —Not substantive evidence—Useful only to corroborate or contradict the evidence of the maker.

It is settled law that a first information report is not substantive evidence. It can be used only to corroborate or contradict the deposition of the maker thereof at the trial. It is, however, admissible under S. 32 (1) Evidence Act, as the statement of a person (since deceased) relating to the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death. —A case of very careful and honestly conducted identification in jail, illustrated.

The practice adopted in the jail identification was that when a person had been arrested charged with complicity in the conspiracy, he was removed from the place of his arrest to a jail where he was in the custody of jail officials and not of police officials. After a certain period he was placed in a line which consisted partly of suspects, but mainly of persons who were not suspected of complicity in a crime. All these persons were dressed in a manner which would prevent witnesses from recognizing a suspect by peculiarities of costume. Witnesses to the offences were then called in one by one. The Magistrate deputed for the purpose was present at all identification proceedings. No two witnesses were allowed to communicate with one another. As each man completed his observation of the persons in the line he was put in a place where he could not communicate with anyone else. As far as possible persons were selected of the same class and position in life as the suspects. The suspects were permitted to change their places in the line from time to time. They were permitted to alter their personal appearances by changing their clothes or by shaving, or having their hair cut or in other manners. The Magistrate prepared a note embodying the results. These notes were proved in the case.

Held, that the identification proceedings were conducted most carefully and absolutely honestly and that every precaution was taken to prevent dishonest or careless identification. (Stuart, C. J. and Raza, J.) RAM PRASAD v. EMPEROR.

—Identification must be immediately after arrest.
In no dacoity case, a court would convict a person who was not identified in the jail or before a proper authority, immediately after the arrest, simply on the strength of identification conducted in the Court of the Committing Magistrate or the Sessions Judge. —Identification evidence—Mere picking out not enough—Evidence as to how the witness came to pick out a particular person and the details of the part that the accused took in the crime are necessary.

The mere fact that witness is able to pick out an accused person from amongst a crowd does not prove that he has identified that accused person as having taken part in the crime which is being investigated. It might merely mean that the witness happens to know that accused person. The principal evidence of identification is the evidence of a witness given in Court as to how and under what circumstance he came to pick out a particular accused person and the details of the part which that accused took in the crime in question. —Offence non cognizable—Complaint instead of charge-sheet filed—Irregularity not material.

The police after making investigation of a non-cognizable offence filed a complaint to the Magistrate instead of submitting the charge-sheet.

—Change for two offences—Witnesses same—Evidence let in one case—Copies of the evidence recorded in the other—Procedure illegal.

A person was charged with two offences namely, under S. 307, I. P. Code, and under S. 20, Indian Arms Act. The witnesses in the two cases were more or less the same. The trying Magistrate recorded the evidence of the witnesses in the case under S. 307 and copies of the evidence of these witnesses were placed on the record of the case under S. 20, Arms Act, except the case of one witness who did not appear in the case under S. 307.

Held, that the procedure was illegal and the trial was vitiated. The general rule in the case of criminal trials is that there should be a separate trial with respect to each distinct offence. The object evidently is that the attention of the trial Court should be directed to the evidence relating to the charge under inquiry and irrelevant matter should be excluded. This object is not achieved but defeated by placing on the record mere copies of the statements of witnesses recorded during the course of a trial relating to another charge. A. I. —Local inquiry by magistrate—Not to understand evidence but to obtain information—Procedure irregular and ultra vires.

From the judgment of a Magistrate it appeared that he used the local enquiry made in the case not for the purpose of understanding the evidence only but for the purpose of obtaining information which did not appear from the evidence of the witnesses. There were other matters in the judgment which clearly showed that in a sense the Magistrate made himself a witness in the case. Held, that the procedure was quite irregular and in adopting it the Magistrate went beyond the powers granted to him by the Cr. The improper procedure of the Sessions Court of allowing the principal accused to remain untried while a charge of murder is proceeded with against those who are supposed to have played a minor part in the crime should be condemned. There is no reason why all the accused should not be tried together at one trial. Even if some of them are principal offenders and the others accomplices, S. 239, Cl. (b), Cr. P. —Joint trial.

—Abettor discharged as unidentified—Further in inquiry against him directed in revision—Trial of others had proceeded apace—Abettor could be tried separately.

A complaint was filed against five persons under S. 325, Penal Code, the 1st being included as an abettor. Accused 1 was discharged on the ground of not being identified and charge was framed against the other four accused. On revision further inquiry was directed which was to give further opportunity to the prosecution witness to identify accused 1. Meanwhile proceedings against the other four accused had proceeded and prosecution witnesses had been cross-examined after the charge.

Held, that though ordinarily the correct course is to try an abettor with the primary offender, yet in this particular instance the proceedings had reached such a stage that a joint trial could not be ordered. A. I. R.

Held, that as regards the purchaser there was a gross abuse of the process of a Criminal Court by utilising criminal proceedings, to which he was not a party, for the detention of property which he had bought and of which he was in possession whether or not the seller had a right to sell it to him. But the purchaser was asked to give an undertaking in writing to the High Court to produce the car whenever called upon to do so either by the High Court or by the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate until the proceedings before him had terminated and upon the purchaser giving security in the sum of rupees ten thousand by his own bond and by one surety to the satisfaction of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, the car in question would be returned to him. —Procedure—Adjournment.*—Adjournment to search for evidence—Not proper.

Cases may arise where evidence is difficult to procure and numerous and lengthy adjournments must be granted, but when once the case is ready for hearing adjournment should not be made in order to search for evidence, the existence of which is entirely problematical. The Court prosecutor came to Court intending to base his case upon the evidence of the witnesses called. These witnesses for the prosecution denied that the accused committed the offence for which he was tried. There was no intimation that further evidence was forthcoming but the prosecutor informed the Court that he would file list of additional witnesses later.

Held, that adjournment should not be made in the case and accused should not be kept under shadow of a charge. (Otter, J.) AH PHONE v. EMPEROR.

—Material facts to be stated in charge and proved

—Unessential allegations need not be proved—Charge good or bad to be determined at the beginning of the trial.

In order to convict a man of an offence, all the material facts which constitute the offence, and which are necessary to enable the parties to 'avail themselves of the verdict and judgment, should the same charge be again brought forward, must be stated upon the indictment, and all these requisite allegations must be satisfied in evidence, and proved as laid. But allegations not essential to such purpose which might be entirely omitted without affecting the charge against the person and without detriment to the indictment are considered as mere surplage and may be disregarded in evidence. The indictment may be good or bad, but it cannot depend upon the facts which will ultimately be found by the jury and it must be good or bad at the beginning of the trial. A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 107, Rel on. An accused was tried jointly with another on (1) a charge of conspiracy to cheat a certain company. He was also singly tried at the same time, (2) for cheating the same company in respect of certain certified report of daily work, and (3) for dishonestly using as genuine the document stated above. The charges on (2) and (3) contained the following words: "in pursuance of the conspiracy in the first charge mentioned." The jury found the accused not guilty on the charge of conspiracy but found him guilty of the other two charges. It was contended that in view of the verdict of not guilty on the charge of conspiracy the conviction on the other charges would not stand.

Held, that the only function of the words "in pursuance of the conspiracy in the first charge mentioned" was to make it plain that counts (2) and (3) had no reference to independent offences or to a different subject-matter than the first count and there was no objection to the jury convicting under counts (2) and (3) although they acquitted on the first. —Minimising offences—When accused can object.

The rule against minimising offences is only intended to cover cases where a Court secures a jurisdiction thereby which it would otherwise not have and thereby prejudices the accused. —Procedure—Irrelevant matters.

—Matters irrelevant to charge should be eliminated.

An important principle of Criminal law is that the guilt should not only be proved beyond any reasonable doubt but that it should be proved strictly in accordance with law. The accused is on his trial in respect of a particular charge and to import matters into the trial not relevant to that charge is equivalent to trying him as to matters on which he has no opportunity to defend himself. —Procedure—Long delay.

—Interval of three years between filing of complaint and trial—Procedure is defective, though not illegal.

On the 23rd March, 1920, the Food Inspector of the Corporation of Calcutta filed a complaint in the Court of the Municipal Magistrate against a person, who, it was complained, had committed the offence of having sold adulterated ghee on the 4th February 1920. The Magistrate ordered summons to issue for the 17th April 1920. On that date the petitioners appeared by pleader and the Magistrate passed an order directing that proceedings be stayed for six weeks as the Food Inspector was on leave. On the record no further order appeared until 29th November 1922. On that date the Food Inspector prayed for the revival of the case and the Magistrate directed the record to be put up. On the 16th December 1922, the Magistrate passed the following order: "Case revived. Issue fresh summons for 13th January, 1923".

CRIMINAL TRIAL

—Reference to third Judge.

—Strong reasons for differing must be present.

Per *Wild, A. J. ## —Re-trial.

—Another view of case may be taken—Retrial not justified.

Where the trial Magistrate after coming to the conclusion that the prosecution story is doubtful, discharges the accused, the mere circumstance that another view may be taken of the case than that which the trial Magistrate takes would not justify a retrial (Addison, J.) MT. But the exercise of such discretionary power under S. 302, Penal Code, in any particular case must depend on its own facts considered in the light of various circumstances, such as the magnitude of the mischief which the crime has a tendency to produce, the effect of the punishment in preventing similar crimes, the motive or inducement to the crime, aggravating or instigating circumstances, and the like. When

It is an elementary proposition in criminal jurisprudence that sentence in each case should be proportionate to the nature and gravity of the crime, and a Magistrate cannot claim a right to inflict a particular sentence in a particular case because he had done so in hundred other cases—some of which were more serious—without any regard to nature of facts, upon which each and every case has to be decided. —False defence of enmity aggravates offence and affects question of sentence.

In a great majority of cases, the plea used in defence is the stereotyped plea of enmity. The plea is characterised by a wanton disregard of truth and in spite of laborious attempts, no malice is established between the accused and the Crown witnesses including the complainant. It ought to be generally known that a false defence of this character has a tendency to aggravate the offence and is a factor which may affect the question of sentence. —False allegation in defence against respectable person aggravates original offence.

False allegation against innocent and respectable persons of criminal conspiracy to bring false charges, when used as defence, aggravate greatly the original offence. This type of defence is much too common in India and it ought to be recognized that where a defence of this character is obviously false, that fact ought to be taken into consideration in awarding punishment. —Concoction imputed to prosecution—Found baseless offence is aggravated.

Per Courtney-Terrell, C.J.—In a clear case where an advocate on the direct instructions of his client argues that the prosecution story is an entire concoction on the part of the police and no evidence whatever elucidated in cross-examination or offered by examination-in-chief is ever produced in support of this argument, the Court should take this into account as a circumstance of aggravation in awarding the sentence. Where such suggestion is made by the legal practitioner without reasonable cause the legal practitioner is guilty of grossest professional misconduct. —Punishment to be awarded according to the circumstances of each case.

When the legislature has laid down a maximum punishment for an offence or a series of offences, it is the duty of the trial Court to apportion punishment in each case after considering all the circumstances having a bearing upon it, and not to shirk its responsibility by imposing the maximum penalty upon every offender. —Principles indicated.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—The sentence passed on a convicted person should not be such as to be open to the criticism that it is an unmitigated exhibition of superior force unredeemed by a tinge of judicial balance.

Walsh, J.—The question of punishment depends on two considerations: firstly, the public importance of the offence and the deterrent effect of the punishment; secondly, the deserts of the particular offender. (Mears, C.J., Walsh and Iqbal Ahmad, J.J.) EMPEROR v. BADAN SINGH, 30 Cr. L. J. 933 = 118 I.C. 577 = A. I. R. 1928 All. 150.

—Punishment should be the least that will prevent repetition of crime by offender and will deter others.

The causing of merely retributive harm, whether by the community or the individual, is itself a crime. Punishment is in itself an evil, justified only by its prevention of greater evil, that is, by its effects in deterring the offender from a repetition of the offence and in deterring others, by his example, from the commission of it. In each case also it must obviously be the least that will produce both these effects. (Hallifax, A.J.C.) MT. NANHI GOUD v. EMPEROR. 101 I.C. 669 = 28 Cr. L. J. 493 = 8 A. I. Cr. R. 139 = A. I. —Killing from desire to kill and killing to do away with resistance to robbery—No difference in gravity.

The distinction in gravity between the act of a man who shoots because he desires to kill another and a man who shoots to kill because he desires that another man should not interfere with his committing the robbery is too fine to form the basis for a difference in the sentence and there is nothing to make the robbery of inoffensive people, such robbery being accompanied by murder, appreciably excused by the fact that the perpetrators desired funds for the purpose of conducting a revolutionary propaganda. —High position—Good service to Government—No grounds for reduction—Loss of reputation and old age—May be considered.

A man is not entitled to get off with a small sentence merely because he is a person of high position and one who has done good service for the Government in the past. When such a man falls in this manner everybody looks to see whether it is not true that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor, and a Court cannot lightly reduce the sentence in such a case to one far below that which should have been awarded to an ignorant and poverty-stricken offender who had in the same way fallen a victim to temptation. On the other hand, the facts that the accused suffers in the loss of his reputation and of his position, a much greater punishment than would be represented by rigorous imprisonment for one year to a common man, and at an old age detention in jail under sentence of rigorous imprisonment in the hot weather is even for a short time a very severe punishment, should be considered. The maximum sentence whether of fine or of imprisonment, provided for by law, represents the sentence to be inflicted in extreme cases. Where there have been several cases of persons living on the border line of foreign territory and importing excisable articles into British territory, it is desirable that as far as possible substantive sentence of imprisonment should be inflicted to prevent their recurrence. In the case of crimes such as illicit traffic in drugs, where the offender may make great profits by breach of the law, the payment of the fine is apt to be considered merely in the nature of a tax which is not deterrent at all. —Trial by jury.

—Hostile witness—Judge should explain to jury about the unreliable nature of his evidence and ask them to reject it—Omission to do so is misdirection.

The evidence of a hostile witness cannot in part be relied upon and the rest of it discarded or rejected. When a witness in declared hostile so that leave to cross-examine is granted to the party calling him, it is necessary that the Judge should explain what the position is, that then arises, namely, that by asking for leave to cross examine the witness, the party calling him admits that he is not a witness of truth and one whose evidence is not entitled to credit, who is prepared to make one statement on oath at one time and another at another time and that the evidence of such witness should be rejected and left out of account in the minds of the jury. It is a rule which leans in favour of the accused and as such ought not to be departed from lightly. The Judge should tell the jury to reject the evidence of such witness altogether and his omission to do so amounts to misdirection. A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 463; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 556, Ref. —Confession—Judge to decide if it was voluntary—The jury if it was true or false—Infringement of the rule is misdirection.

In a trial by Judge and jury it is for the Judge to determine whether the confession is voluntary and for the jury to determine whether it is true or false. It is not open to the Judge to ask the jury to determine whether it is voluntary or not even though that is a question of fact.

In a trial for an offence under S. 395, Penal Code, only evidence against the accused was his own confession which was subsequently retracted. In his direction to the jury the Judge observed. "I have admitted the confession in evidence and have provisionally answered the question if it was voluntarily made. It is for you to determine whether the confession is true or not. You will have to consider circumstances in which it was made. You will also have to consider the suggestions and allegations made against the accused. You must remember that when an accused alleges that he made a confession under inducement and threat from persons in authority the onus is upon him to prove the allegations. It is not of course possible to prove such allegations even if they were true".

Held, that the conclusion from the direction was that they were called upon to determine whether the confession was voluntarily made or not and so the Judge was guilty of serious error of law.

Held further, that the Judge had committed a serious error in directing the jury that the burden of proving threat or inducement was on him and it was impossible to prove such allegation.

Held, that since the confession was the only evidence against the accused, the directions have been serious misdirections which were fatal for trial. (Cuming and

If the prosecution wants to call the counsel for the defence as a witness on its side sufficient notice ought to be given to the accused to engage a competent counsel. It is very reprehensible to call a counsel who is actually defending an accused person as a prosecution witness, in the course of the proceeding. The trial is vitiated by the admission of the evidence of previous conviction prior to the accused's entering upon his defence. Where it was clear that the Magistrate was influenced by his knowledge of bad character of the petitioner.

Held (Per May Oung, J.)—It is not perhaps easy to keep the mind entirely free from prejudice when the record and the police papers show that the prisoner in the dock is an ex convict. But the provisions of S. 310 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, whereby in Sessions trials, all knowledge of previous conviction is rightly withheld from jurors and assessors until after the accused has either pleaded, or been found guilty, indicate the importance of the complete exclusion of such knowledge when weighing the evidence as to the truth or otherwise of the main charge. —Withdrawal.

—Non-compoundable complaint — Withdrawal without cause shown—Validity of.

It is not necessarily unlawful to agree to withdraw a criminal complaint of a non compoundable offence because it may have been withdrawn because the complainant had very little chance to succeed in establishing his case. Where a complaint, made under Ss. 379 and 323, I. P. C. was withdrawn but no cause was shown as to why the complaint, so far as it was under S. 379, was withdrawn, the withdrawal cannot be said to be unlawful because it may have been withdrawn because the complaint under S. 379 was, in the circumstances, not likely to succeed. The Magistrate refused and in appeal the High Court made a complaint against two persons, which came on for hearing before another Magistrate who directed the Public Prosecutor to make an application to the Court which had tried the case for a complaint against a third person under Ss. 193, 465, 471 and 109, I. There is no such invariable rule that justice must ultimately be done. Cases occur where a matter is left in doubt and real justice is not done. —S. 23—Applicability.

—Conviction under S. 23—Misnomer—Two Previous convictions—Not necessary they must have been under the Act.

Section 23 does not lay down any substantive offence and it is therefore inaccurate to speak of a conviction under that section. All that it provides is minimum sentences in certain contingencies unless there are special reasons to the contrary. In the second place, this section does not require that the two previous convictions should have been convictions "under S. 23, Criminal Tribes Act". It only requires that the member of a criminal tribe should have been previously convicted of any of the offences in the Penal Code specified in Sch. I, of the Act and should be again convicted of the same or of any other such offence.

CRIMINAL TRIBES ACT (1924), S. 23—Applicability.

The accused, a registered member of a criminal tribe, was first convicted under S. 457 of Penal Code and sentenced to fifteen stripes. Second time he was again convicted under S. 456 read with S. 75, of the Penal Code and sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment. Third time he was found guilty of an offence under S. 457 of the Penal Code.

Held, that as S. 23, Criminal Tribes Act, was applicable, the accused could be punished with transportation for life, but as the subject matter of the last offence was only a bundle of paddy, a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment would meet the ends of justice. —Seriousness of offence no ground youth, age, illness, sex or interval between then and last coming out of prison—Good grounds for reduction.

In considering either the enhancement or reduction of sentence the mere fact that an offence is not of a serious nature cannot form a special reason. It must be something apart from the nature of the offence such as youth, age, illness or sex and the interval of time which has lapsed between the accused person coming out of prison after serving the last sentence and the commission of the offence. Where therefore a period of about eight years had lapsed between serving the last punishment and commission of offence, the punishment was reduced from transportation to seven years. A. I. The accused was registered as a member of a criminal tribe and was kept in the Sholapur Settlement. Subsequently he was released on probation and allowed to go to Bombay and his roll-call was cancelled. During the period of probation the Criminal Tribes Settlement Officer ordered accused's probation to be cancelled for misconduct, and the accused was ordered to be returned to the Sholapur Settlement. But before passing an order he must satisfy himself that the house is used as described in S. 2, Cls. (a), (b) or (c) and he may do this in any way that does not violate the ordinary rules of fairness and propriety, but before he can pass an order under S. 3 he must not only be satisfied that the houses are used as brothels but he must further find an additional fact to bring it within the provisions of Cls. (a), (b) or (c). When the cases of a large number of houses are jointly considered, though it is not necessary to draw up separate proceedings and hold separate enquiries, yet in deciding the question whether annoyance was caused, the Magistrate should apply his mind to the case of each house separately. —S. 37—Removal of seals.*—What amounts to.

The evidence for the prosecution showed that when the officials of a licensee company visited the premises of the accused the seals which the company had affixed to the meter placed upon the premises of the accused had been removed.

Held, that the accused must be held responsible for removing these seals and that his conviction under R. 106 read with S. 37 (4) was justified. (Shadi Lal, C.J.). MAHOMED SADIQ v. —Sch. Cl. 6, prov. (2)—Discontinuance of supply.—Conditions.

A part of the electric apparatus namely the seals of the cut-out were not in good order and condition. As a result of this defect there had been a leakage of energy.

Held, such a state of things must certainly be deemed to be "likely to affect injuriously the use of energy by the licensee or by other persons," and accordingly the electric company were entitled upon discovering this condition of things, to discontinue the electric supply.

Where a main fuse was burnt out, in other words, where the cut-out became defective,

Held, the company was entitled to discontinue the supply of energy to the consumer. (Scott-Smith and Ffords, J.J.). KARORI MAL v. E. T. LIGHTING CO., LTD. 75 I.C. 456= 4 Lah. 182= 6 L.L.J. 86= A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 142.

At all times considerable weight should be attached to the opinion of the Judge who heard the witnesses as to their relative credibility. When the record does not show that the witnesses on either side have been materially discredited or greatly shaken in cross-examination, it is the duty of the Judge to decide which side is telling the truth. —Examination of witnesses—Obligation of prosecution—Right of cross-examination by defence.

The prosecution is under no obligation to examine witnesses who it has reason to believe will not speak the truth. sometimes to attach weight to the opinion of the assessors, and although their opinion does not have any legal effect, the Judge ought to guard very carefully against allowing a discussion in Court, of the reading of a document in Court, in the presence of the assessors injurious to the accused, when it is by law inadmissible. The benefit of a reasonable doubt ought to be given from the Bench, even to the admission of evidence particularly documentary evidence, during the trial, and when the Judge is unable to make up his mind about admissibility, the proper course for him is, either to direct the prosecution to keep back the documents until he has an opportunity of looking into the law, or to reject them altogether. No Judge in a doubtful case of admissibility ought to allow the evidence first to be given, and then in his judgment give a decision about their admissibility. Doubtful or inadmissible documents ought not to be admitted in criminal trials. (Walsh and Sulaiman, J.J.). LAIGAM SINGH v. EMPEROR. 86 I.C. 817=26 Cr. L.J. 881=6 L.R.A. —Guilt or innocence—Decision on—Not soundness of plea.

Even the entire omission of an available true and complete defence and the substitution for it of unsustainable falsehoods are so closely in accordance with the common, indeed almost universal course of human conduct that it cannot be inferred from such a defence that the guilt of the accused is likely. It is the duty of a Magistrate to find out whether an accused person is guilty or innocent; not merely to decide whether the pleas he chooses to put forward are sound or not. (Hallifax, A.J.C.). There is no section of the Evidence Act, which makes the identification proceedings evidence at all. (Banerji, J.). BINDESHRI v. EMPEROR. 98 I.C. 478=7 L.R.A. Gr. 170=27 Cr. L.J. 1358=A.I.R. 1927 All. 163.

—Indian women.

Indian women can identify their own articles of jewellery even if they are of a common pattern. (Scott-Smith and Ffords, J.J.). ACHPAL v. EMPEROR. 89 I.C. 449=26 Cr.L.J. 1361=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 132.

—When unreliable.

An identification made of a man, who is said to have been wearing a beard at the time of offence and whose beard is concealed or absent at the time of identification, is by no means convincing, and when it stands alone, must be regarded as an unstable piece of evidence. (Walsh and Sulaiman, J.J.). LAIGAM SINGH v. EMPEROR. 86 I.C. 817=26 Cr. L.J. 881=6 L.R.A. Cr. 73=A.I.R. 1925 All. 476.

—Outsiders with accused—Legality of Procedure.

Where owing to the scarcity of other under-trial prisoners in jail outsiders were brought in and placed in the line with the accused.

It was held, that the procedure was no doubt unusual, but in the peculiar circumstances of the case it was justified. (Daniels and Neave, J.J.). ABDUL WAHAB v. EMPEROR. 95 I.C. 756=47 All. 39=27 Cr. L.J. 836=5 L.R.A. Cr. 193=A.I.R. 1925 All. 223.

—After long time—Value of.

Evidence of identification of persons previously unknown after a number of months that certain persons took part in an attack is unreliable, unless there was a regular identification parade in which the witnesses picked out those persons from among others, especially where it is not stated that such persons bear any distinguishing marks by which they can be recognised. (Martineau, J.). MAKHAN SINGH v. THE CROWN. 88 I.C. 61=6 L.L.J. 320=26 Cr.L.J. 445=A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 722.

—After questions put by Court—Value of.

Where it appeared that it was only in answer to questions put by the Court that witness deposed to his being able to identify accused.

It was held, the danger of accepting such a testimony is apparent, since witness had ample opportunity to see the accused during the committal proceedings. (Broadway, J.). REHMAN v. THE CROWN. 83 I.C. 499=26 Cr. L.J. 19=5 L.L.J. 477=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 662.

—Circumstantial evidence.

Accused robbed three passengers in the female compartment causing them injuries one of whom received a grievous hurt, and then jumped out of the train, and was found lying by the roadside as he broke his leg while jumping, having in possession some of the ornaments robbed while more valuable things were taken away by his companion.

Held, the guilt of the accused is perfectly made out. The offence was committed in the morning and the offenders were in the compartment for some time taking off ornaments from the person of the victims and causing them injuries, and there is nothing unlikely in their having been able to identify him. (Abdul Qadir, J.). SARIDAGAR v. KING EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 169.

—Onus.*—Forgery.

Where a certain document filed by one party is alleged to be a forgery, the Court is not bound to enquire into the details but the party alleging that it is a forgery must prima facie make out a case of forgery before asking the Court to reject the document as a forgery. (Coutts and Das, J.J.). LACHMI NARAIN AGARWALA v. MUKHRAM MARWARI. 72 I.C. 971=24 Cr. L.J. 507=A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 31.

—Opinions.*—Admissibility of.

Only what the witness actually saw and heard as to what a mob was doing and saying is admissible to prove the nature of the assembly; his opinion and impressions that the assembly appeared to be unlawful are not admissible. (Jwala Prasad, J.). JOGI RANT v. EMPEROR. 105 I.C. 234=28 Cr.L.J. 906=9 P.L.T. 260=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 98.

—Presumption.*—Stolen property.

The fact that a person is found in possession of stolen property shortly after the theft raises the presumption that he took part in the theft. (Adami and Seroope, J.J.). KHATIR JAMA KHAN v. EMPEROR. 123 I.C. 393=31 Cr. L.J. 492.

—Sufficiency.*—Omission to examine—When material.

Where A was a tenant of a house, and B, a guest in his house complained to Magistrate of nuisance and A was not examined as a witness,

Held, that omission to examine A as witness was not material. (Shah, Ag. C. J. and Crump, J.). BOMBAY MUNICIPALITY v. L. R. MALLANDAINE. 84 I.C. 854=48 Bom. 241=25 Bom. L.R. 1321=26 Cr. L.J. 374=A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 241.

—Suspicion.*—Positive testimony.

Positive testimony should not be rejected on mere suspicion. (Mookerjee and Buckland, J.J.). BEPIN KRISHNA RAY v. JOGESHWAR RAY. 66 I.C. 345=34 Cr.L.J. 256=26 C.W.N. 36=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 730.

—Trial.*—Charge of fraud—Cross-examination of person charged.

A person who is charged with fraud should, when he is examined in Court, be cross-examined in regard to it and his explanation taken into consideration. (Fawcett and Madgavkar, J.J.). D. DHARMAPPA v. P. VENKAPPA. 91 I.C. 426=27 Bom.L.R. 1318=A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 33.

—No opportunity to cross-examine.

Acting on evidence without giving opportunity to cross-examination is illegal. (Jwala Prasad and Coutts, J.J.). MOTI SINGH v. DEANUKDHARI SINGH. 73 I.C. 339=24 Cr. L.J. 595=A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 53.

—Value of.*—Cumulative effect.

Though each of the facts inconclusive, their cumulative value may establish the guilt and exclude other possibilities. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, J.J.). ABDULLAH v. EMPEROR. 95 I.C. 311=27 Cr.L.J. 775.

EVIDENCE—Value of.Retracted statement.*

Evidence of a witness who retracted his statement in the cross-examination cannot be relied upon for convicting an accused person unless there are very strong reasons to suppose that the second statement in the cross-examination is absolutely false. (Abdul Raoof, J.). SHAH ALINE v. CROWN.

84 I.C. 1052=6 L.L.J. 280=

26 Cr. L.J. 412=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 44.

Anonymous letter.

An anonymous letter is no evidence of its contents. (Devadoss and Wallace, J.J.). AYYAMPERU-MAL PILLAI v. EMPEROR.

91 I.C. 50=

27 Cr. L.J. 18=1925 M. W. N. 319=

22 M. L. W. 405=A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 879.

Evidence—No cross-examination.

In the absence of cross-examination evidence is of little value. 17 C.W.N. 280, Foll. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.). SARJU SINGH v. EMPEROR. 88 I.C. 852=

26 Cr. L.J. 1236=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 726.

EVIDENCE—Value of.Evidence disbelieved in essentials.*

Where the prosecution cannot be believed in its essential details, conviction cannot be based upon a part of the story of the prosecution. Where the greater portion of the prosecution evidence is disbelieved, a Court cannot reconstruct a story and convict the accused on the story wholly inconsistent with that told by witnesses. (Foster, J.). JOHARMAL MARWARI v. KING-EMPEROR.

81 I.C. 212=5 P.L.T. 635=25 Cr. L.J. 724=A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 813.

Delayed information.

When a witness admits that he disclosed his knowledge of a crime to the police at a very late date and gives no explanation of this delay, his evidence is of no value. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Le Rossignol, J.). KHERI v. THE CROWN.

99 I. C. 857=3 L. L.J. 147=28 Cr. L. J. 183.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872)—Scope.EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872).—Scope.

—The intention of the Legislature in using the words "in civil proceedings" in S. 196 (7) was to make the statement admissible against the person examined unconditionally so far as civil proceedings are concerned and in criminal proceedings subject to the provisions of S. 132, Evidence Act. S. 196, Companies Act was not intended in any way to override the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. (Jai Lal, J.). RAMCHAND GURWALA v. KING-EMPEROR. 93 I.C. 599=27 Cr. L.J. 1383=

A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 385.

—Applicability of Cr. P. Code.

• The Evidence Act is a separate statute dealing with an important branch of law, and its provisions are independent of the rules of procedure contained in the Criminal Procedure Code and must have full scope unless it is clearly proved that they have been repealed or altered by another statute. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Addison, J.). RANNUN v. KING-EMPEROR. 94 I.C. 901=7 Lah. 84=27 Cr. L.J. 709=

27 P.L.R. 583=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 83.

—S. 3—"Proved."*—Meaning of.

When, after considering all the matters before it, if a Court believes a certain thing exists it cannot say that the thing is not proved. (Hallifax and Kotwal, A.J. Cs.). MANGAL GAUDA v. EMPEROR. 81 I.C. 901=25 Cr. L.J. 1077=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 37.

—S. 8—Depositions.

—Cr. P. Code, S. 360—Non-compliance with S. 360 does not make record entirely inadmissible in evidence—Evidence Act, Ss. 5 and 80—Evidence Act, S. 91.

The provisions of S. 360 are mandatory. But non-compliance does not legally result in the total inadmissibility of the record of evidence and in the absence of any definite provision of law entailing inadmissibility, each case of non-compliance must be considered by the Court on its own merits and the document which purports to be the record can be admitted, but without the presumption laid down in S. 80 of the Evidence Act, and, therefore, open to question by the defence and appraisal by the Court.

The law itself does not expressly lay down that the least failure to comply with the provisions of Section 360 renders the whole document inadmissible. Where therefore there has been an attempt by the presiding officer to comply with its provisions and to secure the accuracy of the record of evidence the provisions of S. 80 do not lead to complete exclusion of the document, and the Court is bound to admit under S. 5 but it is open to each side to adduce evidence as to its faithfulness or otherwise and as to the degree of presumption under S. 80 and the weight to be attached to it. 46 Cal. 895, *Foll. —S. 5—Relevant evidence—Murder trial.

—In the trial for the murder of a particular person the case against the accused under trial, should be determined on evidence which is relevant and admissible under the Act and on the strength of evidence which the Court may consider necessary to record and appreciate with reference to two entirely different murders committed by the accused. —S. 6—Irrelevant evidence.*—Applicability.

A certain witness stated that he had seen three women, who were sleeping in the same bari as the complainant and his wife that night, searching something at dusk,

Held, that as the alleged search that evening was not part of the same transaction as the abduction at night, S. 6 could not make it admissible and as the women were neither parties to the case nor agents to any party, S. 8 was inapplicable, S. 9 was also inapplicable. (Newbould and B. B. Ghose, J.J.). FAZARUDDIN v. EMPEROR.

Held, that the statement was not admissible under S. 6. (Wallace and Jackson, J.J.). KAPPINIAH v. EMPEROR. (1930) M.W.N. 702.

—After occurrence.

What a witness tells at the time of the occurrence in respect of the occurrence itself is res gestae under S. 6. But a statement with regard to an event which took place a year ago would not be part of res gestae. (Cuming and Mukerji, J.J.). KHJIRUDDIN v. EMPEROR. 92 I.C. 442=

—In absence of definite and reliable evidence that the outrage upon a girl in an offence under S. 376, I.P.C. and her statement of the occurrence to her father constitute together res gestae much value cannot be attached to the statement even if it is held to be admissible. (Agha Haidar, J.). GHULAM HUSSAIN v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 337.

—S. 6—Statements of members—Unlawful assembly.

—Evidence of statements, made by members of an assembly the promoters of which were charged with offences under S. 325 read with S. 149, I.P.C., of their determination to force their way through the police forms evidence of a part of the res gestae and is admissible to indicate that the promoters' intention to ignore the police orders had been communicated to sections of the crowd. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 8—Conduct and character.

—S. 8—Conduct and character.

—Criminal tendency—Acts which formed basis of prior charge—Relevancy.

It is not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue. Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales, (1894) A. C. 57, Foll.

Evidence of defalcations both prior or subsequent whether such defalcations formed the basis of another charge on which the accused may have been acquitted or not are admissible in evidence to prove guilty intent as also to anticipate the defence of the non-existence of such intent. (Kinnaird, J.C. and Rupchand Bilaram, A.J.C.). EMPEROR v. STEWART. 97 I.C. 1041=

—S. 8—Hearsay evidence.

—Relevancy.

The answers given by the child in reply to mother's queries could not be admitted in evidence by letting in the mother's statement and that to hold otherwise would be admitting hearsay evidence. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Agha Haidar, J.). EMPEROR v. SOOPI. 120 I.C. 539=

A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 84.

—S. 8—Motive.

—Value of.

Motive for a crime, while it is always a satisfactory circumstance of corroboration when there is convincing evidence to prove the guilt of an accused person, can never supply the want of reliable evidence, direct or circumstantial, of the commission of the crime with which he is charged. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Addison, J.). RONNUN v. KING-EMPEROR. 94 I. C. 901=

7 Lah. 84=27 Cr. L. J. 703=27 P. L. R. 583=
A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 88.

—What is.

In a trial for the murder of a particular person, the prosecution should not show, that on two previous occasions the accused under trial had committed murders but had falsely charged and got convicted some others as murderers. The fact that the previous murders have been committed by the accused does not constitute a motive or preparation under S. 8.

Per Crump, J.—A motive is that which moves a man to do a particular act. Whether the belief which produces the state of mind is true or false, the motive remains the same and the truth or falsity, of the belief is not really in question. (Shah and Crump, J.J.). GANGARAM v. EMPEROR. 62 I.C. 545=22 Cr. L. J. 529=22 Bom. L.R. 1274.

Where the statement of the girl to her mother does not form part of the transaction, viz., the raping of the girl, or occur during it, but is made after this transaction is over, when the perpetrator had gone away and the girl came away from the scene of occurrence to her mother's house, the statement is not relevant under S. 6. (Cuming and Lort-Williams, J.J.). SREEHARI SWARNAKAR v. EMPEROR.

—Robbery and assault.

A statement made by the deceased immediately after the robbery regarding the robbery and also regarding the assault committed in the course of the robbery, is admissible showing conduct, though the person who made it cannot be called to depose to it on oath. (Mullick, Ag.C.J. and Wort, J.). LALJI DUSADH v. EMPEROR. 106 I. C. 698=

—Confession proceedings.

Where an accused person was sent up before a Magistrate under S. 164, Criminal P. C., to have his confession, recorded and he gave the police to understand that he would make a confession, but, instead of making a confession he made a statement, though he was told that it was open to him to say that he would make no statement, Held, that the statement was admissible as evidence of conduct. (Mullick, Ag.C.J. and Wort, J.).

LALJI DUSADH v. EMPEROR. 106 I.C. 698=

A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 162.

—S. 8—Subsequent conduct.

—Value of.

Different persons are differently constituted and that some accused even though innocent deliberately abscond rather than face the ordeal of a criminal trial and that some other innocent accused do equally foolish things such as make a false admission of guilt or pay off the amount said to have been stolen or embezzled in the vain hope that they may escape a criminal prosecution or get off with a light punishment. Such subsequent conduct cannot dispense with the positive proof of the guilt of the accused, the burden of which lies upon the prosecution. When once the Crown has established the guilt of the accused by the evidence of prosecution witnesses then such subsequent conduct may be utilized as furnishing further proof of the correctness of the conclusion as to the guilt of the accused drawn from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses; by itself, however, it can furnish no legitimate proof of the guilt of the accused. (Nanavutty, J.). CHANDRIKA PRASAD v. EMPEROR. 7 O.W.N. 564=

A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 324.

—Approver.

The mere fact of an accused person having taken the Magistrate to a particular spot and pointed out the several places, where the various incidents narrated by the approver took place, is not admissible as evidence of conduct nor is it of any value in determining his guilt. (Tek Chand, J.). BAGEL SINGH v. EMPEROR. 121 I. C. 497=

The fact that the accused pointed out the place, where the weapon was found as being the place at which it was concealed, and the fact that shortly after the crime he was in a very agitated state and made a statement which led to his being asked to show the spot where the weapon used in the commission of the murder was concealed are evidence of conduct under S. 8 of the Evidence Act, which render highly probable, the oral evidence in the case and indicate that the accused was the murderer. —S. 9—Conspiracy.

—Evidence of previous association—Several persons charged of conspiracy—Evidence to show previous association for criminal purposes with approver is admissible to corroborate approver under S. 9 and (or) S. 11 as regards his statement regarding conspiracy.

Where several persons are charged with committing or conspiring to commit a particular dacoity and evidence is tendered to show that prior to the dacoity the accused were closely and intimately associating with the approver and the object of the association was commission of theft and other discreditable acts,

Held, that as far as the evidence of close association with the approver is concerned corroborating the approver's statement that a conspiracy existed, it is admissible under S. 9 and (or) S. 11 of the Act. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 10—Confession by approver.

Held, that (1) the copy of the letter was relevant to show the accused's intention and could be admitted as evidence; and (2) it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that such a letter was sent before the copy could be admitted as evidence. —S. 9—Identification.*—Out of Court—Value of.

The evidence that a person has identified another person as having taken part in a particular offence either in jail identification proceedings or elsewhere is admissible though the value of such evidence is weakened perceptibly as a general rule by failure to identify subsequently in Court. —Independent evidence.

In order to rely on the evidence of persons who identified the accused in jail but failed to do so in Court, the fact of the jail identification must be stated in the witness's evidence. An identification in jail is in essence a statement by the witness, "I saw this man who is now before me taking part in the offence". That statement can be used to corroborate his evidence given in Court. If the witness says in his evidence: "A number of persons were shown to me at the jail and from among them I pointed out those persons whom I had seen taking part in the offence", it is permissible under S. 9 to call independent evidence, such as that of the Magistrate who conducted the identification, to prove the identity of the persons whom the witness picked out at the jail, even though the witness himself may not correctly remember who they were. (Daniels, J.C.). CHUTKAN v. EMPEROR. 90 I.C. 444=26 O.C. 258=26 Cr.L.J. 1564=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 36.

—Magistrate's evidence—Corroborative value.

For a Magistrate or other officer to come into Court and depose that a particular witness in his presence identified one of the accused as having taken part in the dacoity is nothing more than hearsay evidence but the Magistrate's evidence will be strictly relevant under the provisions of the Evidence Act to corroborate the evidence of a witness saying that he identified certain persons at the jail and that the persons whom he there identified were persons whom he had seen taking part in the dacoity. 19 A. —S. 9—Scope.

Ss. 9 and 11 read along with S. 21 of the Evidence Act amply justify a Court in admitting into evidence all previous statements made by the accused which have a bearing on the question of his guilt and whether the previous statement is made to a police officer or to an officer or to a third party is immaterial if the statement is relevant to the fact in issue. —S. 10—Object and applicability.*—Cipher Code—Inference.

The object of S. 10 is merely to ensure that one person shall not be made responsible for the acts or deeds of another until some bond in the nature of agency has been established between them and the acts, words, or writing of another which it is proposed to attribute vicariously to the person charged must be in furtherance of the common design and after such design was entertained.

In a trial of several accused for sedition an exercise book containing a Cipher Code was put in evidence.

Held, that the Cipher Code book was not to be treated as 'the act, word or deed of a particular individual, but the fact that it existed the fact that it set forth the names and addresses of a substantial number of persons charged the fact that it was in a peculiar form such as is not likely to be found in any Code intended to be used for lawful purposes, and many internal indications such as grouping of the names and the use of words and names having a revolutionary significance all gave rise to a probability, amounting almost to certainty that the persons named in the Code were associated for some unlawful purposes whose interests demanded that it should be kept secret and in absence of evidence that the persons named in it were associated for some legitimate purposes to be kept secret for some legitimate reason, the Cipher Code was in itself a good ground for supposing that the persons named had conspired to commit an offence and any other acts or writings of individual conspirators in furtherance of the common design became admissible under S. 10. Existence of conspiracy and joining therein—Proof of, necessary.

Section 10 of the Evidence Act means this: if two persons conspire together to commit an offence, each is regarded as being the agent of another and just as the principal is liable for the acts of the agent, so each conspirator is liable for what is done by his fellow conspirator in furtherance of the common intention which they had both entertained. First, you must find, that there was a conspiracy and, secondly, that the person to whom the doctrine is to apply should have joined the conspiracy before they can be made liable for anything said or done by others. It is settled law that under neither of Ss. 14 and 15 can the evidence on facts similar to but not part of the same transaction as the main fact be received for the purpose of proving the occurrence of the main fact, which must be established by evidence directly bearing on it. But when the existence of that fact has been so established and a question arises as to the state of mind of the person who did it, or whether the act in question was done accidentally or with a particular knowledge or intention, evidence of similar acts may, under certain conditions, be admitted. Section 14 is wholly inapplicable to a case where the state of mind or feeling of the accused is not a fact in issue or a relevant fact, and the guilt or innocence depends on proof of actual facts. 6 Cal. 655; 42 Cal. 957; 47 Cal. 671 (F.B.); 12 P.R. 1913 Cr. and *Reg v. Accused in police custody—Presumption that his confession is induced is not correct.

The mere fact of a person being in custody cannot be a good basis for a presumption that any confession he may make is caused by an inducement, threat or promise having reference to the charge against him, proceeding from some police officer and sufficient to make him believe that he would be benefited in the trial by making it. Admissibility of confession must be decided before contents of confession are looked at.

When the admissibility of a confession depends upon a conclusion as to the truth about conflicting evidence antecedent to the making of the confession and tending to show that it is liable to rejection under S. 24, the trial Judge must make up his mind upon this issue, and decide the question of admissibility before relying upon the contents of the confession. Doubt as to—Admissibility—Court should lean in favour of accused.

In a case of doubt on the question of admissibility of evidence when it is of such vital importance to the prisoners as their own confessions one should not hold them as admissible unless one is affirmatively satisfied as to their relevancy. *R. v. —Three-fold function.

In scrutinising a case from the point of view of S. 24, the Court will have to perform a three-fold function. It will have, as a Court, to determine the sufficiency of the inducement, threat, or promise as affording certain grounds; it will have again to clothe itself with the mentality of the accused to see whether the grounds would appear to the accused reasonable for a supposition that is mentioned in the section; lastly, it will have to judge, as a Court, if the confession appears to have been caused in consequence of the inducement, threat or promise: [52 Cal. 67, Rel.]. There is no rule of law which compels a Court to raise an inference of improper inducement from the mere fact that a confession is retracted. (Broadway and Addison, J.J.). PARTAB SINGH v. Extra-judicial confession is of great importance.

No doubt the extra-judicial confession is of great importance but it must be a true extra-judicial confession and not one fabricated in order to provide additional evidence for what rightly or wrongly the investigation officer considers to be a weak case. Extra judicial confessions are not entitled to any weight—To base conviction on such a confession is not safe.

Apart from the question whether or not extra-judicial confessions are inadmissible in evidence, they are not of such a nature as entitle them to any weight, because it is impossible to ascertain the exact words used by the person. To base a conviction on such a confession is not safe: 14 P. R. 1911 (Cr.), Rel. on. (Broadway and Agha Haidar, J.J.). DEO RAJ v. EMPEROR.

All the parts of a confession are not entitled to equal weight—Some may be believed while others rejected.

After the entire statement of a prisoner has been given in evidence, any part of it may be contradicted by the prosecution if they choose to do so, and then the whole testimony is left open for consideration precisely as in other cases where one part of the evidence contradicts another. Even without such contradiction it is not supposed that all the parts of a confession are entitled to equal credit. If sufficient grounds exist the part that charges the prisoner may be believed, while that which is in his favour may be rejected: 40 Cal. 878, Foll. (*Stuart C. —Village Panch telling that truth has come out and the accused had better say what he knew—Confession was held inadmissible.

Whether any threat or inducement was offered or not in a particular case is a question of fact and has to be decided with reference to the circumstances of that case and that it is not safe to make any generalisations merely on the ground that certain set of words used in a particular case or particular cases have been held to be in the nature of an inducement.

Where a village Panch told the accused that the truth had come out, that the villagers were being worried about the affair and he had better say what he knew and the accused thereupon made a confession, —Statement of accused before a Magistrate: "I want to make a clean breast of everything for the reason that if I serve the Government in any way, the Government may take pity on me" was held not in itself inadmissible.

In order to make a confession inadmissible there must be something from which it should be inferred that the inducement or promise was given to the accused by some person who had authority to give it. It is not enough for the accused to entertain a hope, which may turn out to be an idle hope, that in consequence of his giving certain information, he would be rewarded by the Government, it must be shown that the hope was directly inspired by some one who had authority to make the promise.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 24—Inducement.

Where an accused in making a confession to a Magistrate said: "I want to make a clean breast of everything for the reason that if I serve the Government in any way, the Government may take pity on me,"

Where, although the Mukhia, the person confessed to, is undoubtedly by a man in authority, and would appear to a villager as a person who was able, or likely to be able, to promise a pardon or some other inducement, the confessor volunteered to make the statement if he could get some assurance from the Mukhia that he, the Mukhia, would do his best to help him,

Held, that it is not an inducement proceeding from the person in authority within the meaning of the section so as to make the confession either inadmissible or irrelevant. (*Walsh and Pullan, J. —Pressure by police inducing accused to suppose that he would get a temporal benefit—Confession is irrelevant.

If the pressure exercised by a police officer in extorting confession from an accused is sufficient to give the accused grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature, the confession would not only be weak in value, but wholly irrelevant under S. 24. —Person in authority telling accused that if he gives true account he will be pardoned—Accused's confession is irrelevant, unless the inducement has ceased to operate.

If a man is told by a person in authority that if he gives a true account of the matter he will be pardoned, that is a continuing offer, the thread of which continues unbroken until it is accepted by the confession which completes the bargain, unless there is some circumstance which breaks it so as to show that the inducement no longer operates, and that the person confessing has no longer any hope of gaining anything from the authorities by making confession. —Promise to consider the prayer for being taken as approver—Confession is inadmissible.

Where accused is told by a person in authority that if he makes a voluntary confession which is considered to be full and true, his prayer for being made an approver will receive due consideration,

Held, the confession made under such circumstances is inadmissible. (Walsh and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ.). TARA v. KING-EMPEROR. 74 I.C. 829=45 All. 633=21 A.L.J. 585=24 Cr. L.J. 785=A.I.R. 1924 All. 72.

—Confession—Fear encouraged by Police officer—Offer of pardon—Statements are inadmissible.

A confession made by an accused person under fear, encouraged by a police officer in a subtle way in the hours that elapsed before the accused reached the Magistrate, is inadmissible in evidence. Accused made an incriminating statement before a Magistrate and was sent to jail. An application for bail was refused at the instance of the Police. The accused was suddenly released on nominal bail and thereafter he made himself useful to the Police by pointing out various places and in other ways. Subsequently he made a second statement before the Magistrate more detailed than the first, much in the fashion of an approver's statement.

Held, that under such circumstances it was difficult to believe that the accused was not given to understand that a pardon was going to be offered to him. The second statement by the accused was inadmissible in evidence. A confession made by an accused person on an inducement by a Police Officer that he would be offered a pardon is admissible in evidence. The evidence of an accomplice, if suspicious, requires corroboration. (Walmsley and Sham-sul Huda, JJ.). EMPEROR v. ANANT KUMAR BANERJEE. 60 I.C. 417=22 Cr. L.J. 225=32 C.L.J. 204.

there is sufficient evidence to prove the confession. A mere general statement to the effect that the prisoner had confessed, is too uncertain a foundation to sustain a finding against him and the Trial Court ought to ascertain as far as possible the very words spoken by an accused who is said to have confessed. There may however be cases in which the evidence gives the substance, though not the actual words of the statement made by the accused and if that evidence is reliable there is no rule of law which precludes the Court from holding, that the confession has been proved: 10 B.L.R. 322, *Ref. Confession duly recorded after taking all precautions—Retraction without sufficient explanation as to how the accused came to make the confession, does not make it inadmissible.

Where an accused makes a confession after all the precautions necessary have been taken by the Magistrate recording the confession, the mere fact that the confession has been retracted will not make it inadmissible unless the accused gives any sufficient reason as to how he came to make the confession.

A man of sound mind and full age, who makes a statement in ordinary simple language, must be bound by the language of the statement and by its ordinary plain meaning. A. I. R. 1925 All. 627 (F. —S. 24—Retracted confession—Conviction on.

Person making confession may be convicted when Court thinks that it is voluntary and true.

There is nothing in law to prevent a Court from convicting a person upon a confession which has been subsequently retracted, provided that the Court is convinced that the statement is voluntary and true. If there be anything from the barest suspicion to positive evidence that the confession has been obtained by threat, persuasion, etc., such confession has of course to be discarded. But where a confession is made by a person who is sui juris before a Magistrate in an atmosphere untainted by the influence of the police or by any other influence and there are no suspicious features about it there is no reason why the statement should not be accepted. (Young and Sen, J.J.). MT. KHUBAN v. EMPEROR. 120 I.C. 287=31 Cr. L.J. 26=1930 Cr. C. 45=A.I.R. 1930 All. 29.

—Rule of Practice.

It is a rule of practice not to rely on a retracted confession unless it is corroborated by some evidence to show that the confession is true. As a matter of law it cannot be laid down that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence, and a prisoner may be convicted on his own confession without any corroborative evidence and even when a confession has been retracted, if the jury believe that the confession contains a true account of the prisoner's connexion with the crime. Retracted confession made voluntarily is sufficient to warrant conviction.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 24—Retracted confession—Conviction on.

A confession made voluntarily without any pressure having been brought to bear upon the accused, is sufficient to warrant the conviction of the accused even although such confession may subsequently be retracted. (Broadway and Agha Haidar, J.J.). RAHMAN v. EMPEROR. 119 I.C. 420=1930 Cr. C. 104=30 Cr. L.J. 1080=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 83.

Held, that the confession could be the basis of a conviction. (Waller and Cornish, J.J.). KUTTI-APPA CHETTY v. EMPEROR. 1929 M.W.N. 791.

Detailed and voluntary confession subsequent retraction—Parts not found to be true—Sufficient for conviction.

Confession made by an adult man who understood what he was doing, though retracted, is sufficient for the conviction of the person making it, even although certain parts of it are not found to be true, provided that there was a detailed confession and it was made voluntarily and in spite of the fact that he was explained the consequences of making it. (Stuart, C.J. and Raza, J.). NAWAB v. EMPEROR. 118 I.C. 757=6 O.W.N. 845=30 Cr. L.J. 967=1929 Cr. C. 220=A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 381.

Conviction may be based on retracted confession though it must be dealt with caution.

A retracted extra judicial confession can in law be a sufficient basis to support a conviction. Though utmost caution must be used in dealing with retracted confessions, there is no rule that they are not by themselves legal evidence sufficient to justify a conviction: A.I.R. 1921 Sind 129, Foll. (Rupchand and Barley, A.J.Cs.). SANWALDAS v. EMPEROR. 1923 Cr. C. 682=A.I.R. 1929 Sind 253.

—Accused retracting his confession—Court believing it to be true and voluntarily made—Conviction on such retracted confession although uncorroborated by independent evidence is not illegal. (Zafar Ali and Coldstream, J.J.). MAJHI v. EMPEROR. 104 I.C. 247=28 Cr. L. J. 807=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 682.

Conviction based on that confession alone is not illegal.

A conviction based alone on a retracted confession of the accused himself is not bad where the trial Court is satisfied that the confession was made voluntarily and that the accused was under no inducement or threat at the time when he made the confession, that he was informed clearly that if he confessed he would not get a pardon and he stated that he quite understood all these circumstances; that he wished to make his statement voluntarily and that he had no idea that he would get a pardon. Retracted confession may be used against person making it as well as against his co-accused—Retracted confession may form basis of conviction as against person making it, and no corroboration is necessary—Weight to be given to such confession depends upon circumstances.

accused for the same offence. As against the person making it, a retracted confession may form the basis of a conviction, even without any corroborative evidence. From the point of view of legality alone the fact that a confession has been retracted is immaterial. The weight to be given to such confessions both as against the person making it and the persons being tried jointly with him is another question and must depend on the circumstances of each case. In deciding whether a retracted confession is to be admitted in evidence, it is doubtless necessary to examine, not only the statement made by the prisoner as to how he came to make the confession, but all the circumstances of the case. —Legality of.

It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. The weight to be given to it must depend on the circumstances under which the confession was given and retracted including the reasons given for retracting. There is no statutory bar to a conviction on such evidence, but a confession must not be regarded in the same light as an admission in a civil Court.

A retracted confession may be impugned on the ground it was not made voluntarily or was not true. (Pipon, J.C.). MOTI RAM v. EMPEROR.

—Absence of—Conviction cannot be based on such confession.

The weight to be given to a retracted confession must depend upon the circumstances under which the confession was originally made and the circumstances under which it was attracted, including the reasons given by the prisoner for its retraction. Unless the confession is corroborated in material particulars by credible independent evidence, or unless the character of the confession and the circumstances under which it was taken indicate its truth it would be unsafe to rely on it.

The accused was appointed approver in a case of murder. He made several confessional statements implicating himself and the other accused in the murder. But at the Sessions trial he unreservedly retracted his previous statements as approver and that he knew nothing of the murder and that he was tutored by the police into making those statements which were false. The conditional pardon granted to him was withdrawn and he was put on his trial on the previous charge of murder. There was no evidence to corroborate his confession and further the various confessional statements made by him were wanting in those natural details which one would ordinarily expect in a free and voluntary confession. The statements also contradicted one another on several important points, —Voluntary nature is test of admissibility—Factors to determine—Mentality of accused—Sufficiency of inducement and its relation with confession as cause and effect—Proof of inducement is not necessary.

The test of admissibility of a confession is its voluntary nature and not its falsity or truth. To determine the voluntary nature or otherwise of a confession, the mentality of the accused is to be judged rather than that of the person in authority. Not merely actual words but words accompanied by acts or conduct as well on the part of the person in authority which may be construed by the accused person, situated as he then is, as amounting to an inducement, threat or promise, will have to be taken into account. A perfectly innocent expression, coupled with acts or conduct on the part of the person in authority, together with the surrounding circumstances may amount to inducement threat or promise. In scrutinising a case from the point of view of S. 24 of the Evidence Act the Court will have to perform a three-fold function, (1) to determine the sufficiency of the inducement, threat or promise, (2) the mentality of the accused, and (3) whether the confession appears to have been caused in consequence of the inducement, threat or promise. The section does not require positive proof (as defined in S. 8 of the Act) of improper inducement to justify the rejection of the confession, the word "appears" indicating a lesser degree of probability than would be necessary if "proof" had been required. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 24—What is confession.

he was responsible for the act and he nods his head and salams in reply, the conduct does not amount to confession. It is impossible to determine what the accused understood to be the meaning of remarks addressed to him as to his complicity in the crime and without being satisfied that the accused exactly understood the meaning and the import of the question addressed to him, the signs made by him, standing by themselves are meaningless. He might have completely misunderstood what was sought to be conveyed to him and have thus made the signs which were intended to be in answer to something which was entirely different from what his questioners were anxious to put him and therefore confession remains unproved and so is no confession. —Any statement by a person which would suggest an inference as to his guilt may be a confession within S. 24 of the Act. If it is found that a confession recorded under S. 164 of the Cr. P. C. was procured by a Police Officer by the offer of an inducement, it becomes inadmissible under S. 24 of the Evidence Act.

Per Shah, J.—S. 24 will apply even if the person confessing was not a accused person at the time of confession. It is sufficient if he ultimately comes to be the accused person with reference to the charge in respect of which he is said to have confessed. Though a statement of an approver may be given in evidence against him under S. 389 (2) of the Cr. P. C. it cannot be said that the operation of S. 24 is altogether excluded, if it is shown that some influence was proceeding from some authority, simultaneously with the legal tender of pardon, which would invite the application of S. 24 of the Evidence Act, then the confessional part of statement would be inadmissible by virtue of the section. Per Heaton, A.C.J.—(Hayward, J.) Semle :—A statement falling within S. 389 (2) of the Code excludes the operation of S. 24 of the Evidence Act. Question of admissibility of confession comes when statement is made to police officer or while in police custody.

The question whether or not a statement is to be regarded as admissible as being a confession or not usually arises in the case of a statement made to a police officer or in the case of statement made to a man while in custody of the police. (Rankin, C. J. and Buckland, J.). AMBAR ALI v. EMPEROR. 1929 Cr. C. 194 = A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 539.

Admissibility in evidence is a matter which is to be decided after a full consideration of the evidence and the particular circumstances of each case.

It is not possible for a Court to say that the making of a confession appears to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise except upon evidence before it. The inference may be suggested by the confession itself or by the evidence of the prosecution or by the evidence adduced by the accused person or by the surrounding circumstances which the Court is always bound to take into consideration, but the conclusion cannot be reached on surmise or conjecture. Whether or not a confession is admissible in evidence is a matter which is to be decided after a full consideration of the evidence and the particular circumstances of each case: A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 13. The widest and most comprehensive extension of the term "police officer" cannot make it include a Kotwar in the Central Provinces. Person convicted on mere evidence that he pointed out places from which portions of stolen property were recovered—Legality.

The only evidence on which a person's conviction was based was that he pointed out three places from which portions of the stolen property were recovered. Person's father and brother were also suspected and eventually discharged.

Held, that as his relations were also concerned in the crime, it was possible for the person to have knowledge of the places without himself being guilty of any offence and so the recoveries alone were not sufficient to justify the conviction: 18 P. —S. 27—Interpretation.

—‘Fact’.

The expression “fact” as defined in S. 3 includes not only the physical fact but also the psychological fact or mental condition of which any person is conscious. It is in the former sense that the word is used in S. 27. (Shadi Lal, C.J., Harrison, Fforde, Tek Chand, Jai Lal, Dalip Singh and Agha Haidar, J.J.). SUKHAN v. EMPEROR. 115 I. C. 6=10 Lah. 283=30 P. L. R. 197=

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 27—Scope.

 12 A. I. Cr. R. 382=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 344 (F. B.).

—‘Information.’

Fforde, J.—The word “statement” is used interchangeably with the word “information”. A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338, Diss. from. (Shadi Lal, C.J., Harrison, Fforde, Tek Chand, Jai Lal, Dalip Singh and Agha Haidar, J.J.). SUKHAN v. EMPEROR.

115 I. C. 6=10 Lah. 283=30 P. L. R. 197=
 11 L. L. J. 159=30 Cr. L. J. 414=
 12 A. I. Cr. R. 382=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 344 (F. B.).

—‘Information.’

The word “information” cannot be used as synonymous with the word “statement.” The word “information” as distinct from the word “statement” connotes two things, namely, a statement or other means employed for imparting knowledge possessed by one person to another, and the knowledge so derived by the other person. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, J.J.). KARAM DIN v. EMPEROR.

115 I. C. 1=30 Cr. L. J. 385=
 A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338.

—‘Confession.’

In construing S. 27 the word “confession” does not necessarily mean a complete confession of guilt but means and includes any incriminating statement. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, J.J.). KARAM DIN v. EMPEROR. 115 I. C. 1=30 Cr. L. J. 385=
 A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338.

—‘Discovered.’

Even more important is the word “discovered”. It is used in a peculiar sense. The test is that the fact discovered must be discovered in the sense, that the proof of the existence of that fact no longer rests on the credibility of the accused’s statement but rests on the credibility of the witnesses who depose to the existence of that fact. The rest of the information is not admissible. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, J.J.). KARAM DIN v. EMPEROR.

115 I. C. 1=30 Cr. L. J. 385=
 A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338.

—‘Distinctly.’

Under S. 27 the information to be proved must relate distinctly to the fact thereby discovered. The word “distinctly” in S. 27 is used in some sense other than the word “directly”. It is meant to exclude certain things and to limit and confine the information which may be proved within the definite limits and not necessarily to include everything which may relate to that information. (Harrison and Dalip Singh, J.J.). KARAM DIN v. EMPEROR.

115 I. C. 1=30 Cr. L. J. 385=
 A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 338.

—Section must be strictly construed.

S. 27 must be very strictly construed. Where one accused has agreed to point out a place where a fact would be discovered, in pursuance of his statement to point out that place, the section does not cover similar statements of the other accused in police custody. (Prideaux, A.J.C.). KUDAON v. EMPEROR. 91 I. C. 236=21 N. L. R. 86=
 27 Cr. L. J. 60=A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 407.

—S. 27—Scope.

—Out of statement containing confession only such portion as leads to discovery is admissible.

Per Graham, J.—Section 27 being a proviso to the preceding sections must be strictly construed and any relaxation must be sparingly allowed, case being exercised to see that the purpose and object of Ss. 25 and 26 are not rendered nugatory by any lax interpretation.

A statement made by an accused while in police custody which contains a confession of guilt and also supplies information in consequence of which a discovery is made is not admissible in its entirety under S. 27, but only so much of it is admissible as relates distinctly or immediately to the discovery.

Per Lort-Williams, J.—S. 27 is not a proviso to either S. 24 or S. 25. It follows that some restricted or limited meaning narrower than the natural meaning must be attached to the words in S. 27.

The practice in England now is and doubtless was at the time when the Evidence Act was passed to allow to be stated in evidence that in consequence of information received from the prisoner certain facts had been discovered, thus to the extent of fixing the prisoner with knowledge. To this extent evidence under S. 27 may be given. (Graham and Lort-Williams, JJ.). SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCE OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL v. BHARJOO MAJHI.

34 C.W.N. 106=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 291.

—The provisions of S. 27 must be construed as favourably to the accused as possible for it is a section which makes an exception against the accused contrary to the general sections, namely, 25 and 26, which are in his favour.

When the accused stated "I buried the shirt, which was my share of the stolen property, under the beri tree." The shirt was accordingly found under the tree.

Held, that the fact that the accused buried that shirt or the fact that it was his share of the stolen property was not "discovered" within S. 27. Both these statements rested purely on the credibility or otherwise of the accused's statements: the fact that it was his share of the stolen property did not relate distinctly to the fact discovered which was merely that a certain article was buried under a certain tree: these facts could not be proved and would not be admissible or relevant against the accused. What could be rendered admissible under S. 27 would be that which the Court would find necessary in order that the statement may be intelligible and the fact that this was the accused's share of the stolen property or that he buried it, would not necessarily be proved by the admission of the statement. —Statement by accused that he buried body of person murdered at place pointed out by him is admissible only for S. 201, I. P. C.

A statement made by the accused to the police that he had buried the body of the murdered person at the place pointed out by him is clearly admissible in evidence under S. 27 only for the purposes of S. 201, I. —S. 27—What can be proved.

—Only so much of the information given by the accused as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered can be proved: A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 844, Rel. on. (Wild, A. J. C. on difference between Percival, J. C. and Rupchand, A. J. C.). MOHOMUD YUSUF v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 865=

—Only that portion of information which is immediate and proximate cause of discovery of fact can be proved.

The legislature has prescribed two limitations in order to define the scope of the information provable against the accused: (1) The information must be such as has caused the discovery of the fact, and (2) the information must "relate distinctly" to the fact discovered. The requirements of both the conditions specified above must be satisfied before an incriminating statement can be received in evidence. Thus, only that portion of the information is provable which was the immediate or proximate cause of the discovery of the fact. Anything, which is not connected with the fact as its cause, or is connected with it, not as its immediate or direct cause, but as its remote cause, does not come within the ambit of the section and should be excluded.

A was being tried under S. 302, I. P. C., for having committed the murder of B who was proved to have suddenly disappeared from his house and whose dead body was recovered from a well two days later. At the time of his disappearance B was wearing certain ornaments, but these ornaments were not found on his body at the time of his recovery from the well. During the investigation A was alleged to have made a statement to the police in these terms: "I had removed the karas, had pushed the boy into the well, and had pledged the karas with Alla Din" and in consequence of the information so received the karas were recovered from Alla Din, which were identified as those worn by B at the time of his disappearance.

Held, (Per Full Bench) that the statement that the accused had pledged with Alla Din the karas subsequently recovered from the latter is admissible under S. 27 but that the rest of the incriminating statement cannot be received in evidence. (Per Jai Lal, J.)—The statement "had removed the karas and had pledged the karas with Alla Din" is admissible under S. 27 while the statement "had pushed the boy into the well" is not admissible. —The words used by the legislature in S. 27 make it absolutely clear that only so much of such information whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact which is deposited as discovered in consequence of the information received, may be proved.

An accused gave information to the police in these words: "I shall produce the lathi with which I killed Ismail." It had been admitted as evidence under S. 27: The lathi which the accused handed over had no marks of blood whatsoever.

Held, that if the mere fact of the lathi having been handed to the police, might be relied upon, for the purpose of introducing an alleged confession made by the accused to the police, the provisions of S. 26 would become nugatory. —As S. 27 is intended to enable the prosecution to prove a confession made under certain circumstances, the whole of the information including the confessional portion thereof, given by the prisoner, which relates to the fact includes not only the concrete thing discovered by the investigating officer, but also its description as given by the accused including its connexion with the crime which is under investigation. While only so much of the information can be proved as has led to the discovery of the fact, there is no legal justification for splitting up or cutting down the statement of the prisoner so as to make it a vague and unintelligible statement and thus to defeat the very object with which S. 27 was enacted and, therefore, the information must be proved in the precise terms in which it was given. It is not safe to base a conviction upon the evidence of such an approver who obviously is deeply interested in putting responsibility for the offence upon shoulders other than his own, unless there is some independent evidence to corroborate his story in material particulars. The mere fact that the approver produced a spear and a dang from a field and he stated that the spear was used by the accused is not corroboration of the approver's story; so also the fact that the accused was stained with human blood, does not corroborate the approver's story. —Before S. 30 of the Evidence Act can be applied it must be proved that a confession has been made by one of the persons who are being tried jointly for the same offence and that the confession affects the person making it as well as some other persons so jointly being tried. The section is new to the Indian Evidence Act as contrasted with the English Law and must be construed strictly. When once there is no such confession as affects the person making it any statement made by one accused cannot be treated as evidence against the co-accused or be taken as affording corroboration of the evidence of the approver. (Beaseley, C. J. and Ananthakrishna Iyer, J.). ABBOI NAIDU v. EMPEROR. 1929 M.W.N. 698.

—Statement must not be self-exculpating.

Section 30 contemplates a statement, which, taken by itself, is sufficient to justify the conviction of the person making it for the offence for which he is being jointly tried with the other person or persons against whom it is tendered. 2 All. 444, Foll. (Wadegaonkar, A. —Statement must incriminate the maker himself more than or at least equally with the co-accused.

The test to determine whether any statement by a co-accused amounts to a confession under S. 30 is to see whether his statement proposed to be used in evidence against another is sufficient by itself to justify his conviction for the offence for which he is jointly tried with the other person against whom it is tendered. The statement of one prisoner cannot be taken as evidence against another prisoner under S. 30 unless the parties are admittedly in pari delicto, that is, unless a confessing prisoner implicates himself to the full as much as his co-prisoner whom he is criminalizing. The ratio decidendi of the cases bearing on this point is that statements which incriminate the maker more than, or equally with, others, alone can afford any satisfactory guarantee of their truth. This necessarily means less weight must be attached to statements which implicate the maker in a lesser degree than others. Where the principal blame is laid on others the statement is self-serving according to the ideas of the person making it and is entirely excluded from consideration. There is absolutely no guarantee whatever as to its truth where the statement entirely exonerates the maker. Such a statement cannot be held admissible as against the co-accused. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). SHEOCHARAN v. EMPEROR. 90 I.C. 385=21 N.L.R. 88=26 Cr. L.J. 1537=A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 117.

—Confession to be used against co-accused must be confession of guilt of maker. (Ross and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.). BIGNA KUMHAR v. EMPEROR. 94 I.C. 258=1926 P.H.C. 167=27 Cr. L.J. 594=A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 440.

—A confession should justify the conviction of the confessor, and only then it is admissible against the confessor's co-accused. 22 Cr. L.J. 260, Foll. (Harrison, J.). FAKHER-UD-DIN v. CROWN. 95 I.C. 63=6 Lah. 176=26 Cr. L.J. 735=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 435.

—Confession to be admissible must equally incriminate the maker with the co-accused against whom it is to be used. (Kotwal and Kinkhede, A.J.Cs.). SHEROO v. EMPEROR. 81 I.C. 891=25 Cr. L.J. 1067=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 78.

—Confession of co-accused must implicate the maker to the same extent as the other accused.

The statement of an accomplice is taken into consideration when he himself admits his own guilt to the same extent to which he implicates others. His confession may be taken into consideration against such other persons as well as against himself, because the admission of his own guilt operates as a sort of sanction which to some extent takes the place of the sanction of an oath and so affords some guarantee that the whole statement is a true one. The word 'confession' in S. 30 cannot be construed as including a mere inculpatory admission of guilt. A confession unsupported by other testimony is evidence of the weakest kind against a co-accused. 7 All. 646, Foll. (Dalal and Cuming, A.J.Cs.). SHEO AMBAR v. EMPEROR. 77 I.C. 439=25 Cr. —Merely because a confession is not complete and detailed up to the hilt it does not become inadmissible against a co-accused. (Walsh and Ryas, JJ.). LAKHAN v. EMPEROR. 84 I.C. 858=5 L.R.A. Cr. 101=26 Cr. L.J. 324=A.I.R. 1924 All. 511.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 30—Essentials for Admissibility.

—Confession of co-accused need not completely implicate himself—Substantial implication is sufficient.

No general rule can be laid down as to the admissibility of confession against co-accused and each case must be decided on its own facts. All that is required is that the confession should substantially implicate its maker in regard to the crime with which he and his co-accused are charged. It is not necessary that there should be an admission of actual guilt. It is sufficient if the admission establishes constructive guilt. (Mullick and Bucknill, JJ.). SUKA RAUT v. EMPEROR.

Nor can such a confession even if it be corroborated by other evidence which is insufficient by itself to sustain the conviction of the non-confessing co-accused form a legal basis for his conviction.

Per Full Bench.—But if there is any other relevant matter implicating the co-accused the Judge is permitted by S. 30 to consider confession along with the said matter and as a result of such consideration to convict the accused. —S. 30—Scope and interpretation.

—Per Macnair, A.J.C.—When S. 30 lays down that the Judge may consider a fact in certain circumstances it plainly declares that fact to be relevant in those circumstances. (Findlay, J.C., Macnair and Subhedar, A.J.Cs.). GOBARYA v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 242 (F.B.).

—Per Full Bench.—Court has discretion to exclude a confession by an accused altogether from consideration against the co-accused if it is so disposed, Per Macnair, A.J.C.—The use of the word "may" does not show that every confession is of very small-value against a co-accused. It cannot be said that the word "may" gives the Court right to exclude the confession from consideration if it is so disposed. The Judge is given a discretion but the discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner; if the confession would help in arriving at a decision that the accused is guilty he must do so. (Findlay, J.C., Macnair and Subhedar, A.J.Cs.). GOBARYA v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 242 (F.B.).

—“Same offence”—Meaning.
 The expression “same offence” in S. 30 means the identical offence and does not mean an offence of the same kind. The legislature did not intend the section to cover different offences in the same transaction by different persons. The illustration to S. 30 makes the meaning of the section quite clear. (Cuming and Lort-Williams, J.J.). GOUB CHANDRA DAS v. EMPEROR. 115 I. C. 339=

—Section 30 does not refer to statements made at the trial but the statements made before and proved at the trial: 33 Mad. 302, Diss. from; 45 All. 323 and 4 Cal. 483, Appr. (Waller, J.). GOVINDA NAIDU v. EMPEROR. 118 I.C. 512=2 M.Cr.C. 76=30 Cr.L.J. 932=A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 285.

—“May take into consideration.”

The expression ‘may take into consideration’ points to the necessity of there being other evidence on record to which this statement can lend assurance. (Kinkhede, A. J. C.). NEEHA v. EMPEROR. 109 I.C. 801=11 N.L.J. 104=29 Cr.L.J. 609=10 A.I.Cr.R. 340=A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 213.

—“Affect”—Meaning.

The word “affect” is a very wide one and S. 30 is not limited to a case where the confessing accused directly implicates another accused as well as himself but also covers a case where the confession indirectly affects a co-accused. (Fawcett and Madgavkar, J.J.). EMPEROR v. SHIVABHAI BECHAR-BHAI. 97 I.C. 660=50 Bom. 683=28 Bom.L.R. 1013=27 Cr.L.J. 1140=A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 513.

—To use therefore a statement made in the dock by one accused against the other in a joint trial, offends against at least two of the fundamental principles of criminal law. What is contemplated by Section 30 is formal proof by the prosecution of a confession previously made. When you prove a confession made by a person, you tender evidence at the trial that on some previous occasion he did in fact make a confession, and that is the only thing which was ever contemplated by the section. (Walsh, J.). MAHADEO PRASAD v. KING EMPEROR. 76 I.C. 1025=25 Cr.L.J. 305=21 A.L.J. 179=45 All. 323.

—Reliability depends upon circumstances in which declaration was made and nature of its record.

A dying declaration under the Indian Law assumes a character very widely different from what it is under the English Law. A dying declaration is relevant under the Indian Evidence Act, whether the person who made it was or was not at the time when it was made, under expectation of death, and the weight to be attached to it depends not upon the expectation of death which is a guarantee of its truth, but upon the circumstances and surroundings under which it was made and very much also upon the nature of the record that has been made of it. Hence it becomes almost always a question of fact as to whether it should be relied upon or not. (Greaves and Mukerjee, JJ.). EMPEROR v. PREMANANDA DUTT. 88 I.C. 1000=29 C.W.N. 738=42 C.L.J. 247=

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 32—Dying declarations—Partial acceptance.*—S. 32—Dying declarations—Partial acceptance.

—Acceptance of dying declaration in part and rejection of the rest is not permissible.

A dying declaration stands upon a widely different footing from the testimony of a witness given in Court. In the case of the latter it is permissible and at times necessary under certain circumstances to accept a part which is unimpeachable and reject that which is obviously untrue, though, to found a criminal conviction on such appraisement of evidence will be very often unsafe. As regards a dying declaration, to accept a portion and reject the rest is entirely out of the question; there must be absolute guarantee of the accuracy of the record and the truth of the entire statement before it can be acted upon. (Greaves and Mukerji, JJ.). EMPEROR v. PREMANANDA DUTT. 88 I.C. 1000=29 C.W.N. 738=42 C.L.J. 247=52 Cal. 987=26 Cr. L. J. 1256=A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 876.

—S. 32—Dying declarations—Procedure of taking.

—Form of dying declaration should show distinctly the questions put to the declarant and his answers to them.

Where a statement is not the ipsissima verba of the person making it but is composed of a mixture of questions and answers there are several objections open to its reception in evidence, which it is desirable should not be open in cases in which the person has no opportunity of cross-examination. In the first place the questions may be leading questions and in the condition of a person making a dying declaration there is always a very great danger of leading questions being answered without their force and effect being freely comprehended. In such circumstances the form of the declaration should be such that it would be possible to see what was the question and what was the answer, so as to discover how much was suggested by the examining Magistrate, and how much was the production of the person making the statements. R. v. Mitchell, 17 Cox. C. O. 503 (1892), Foll. (Greaves and Mukerji, JJ.). EMPEROR v. PREMANANDA DUTT. 88 I.C. 1000=29 C.W.N. 738=42 C.L.J. 247=52 Cal. 987=26 Cr. L. J. 1256=A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 876.

evidence against third persons, provided that the reference to such third persons is not foreign to that portion of the statement which is against the interest of the declarant. But although the whole statement of a deceased person is admissible in evidence, the value which the Court will attach to such evidence will depend in each case upon a variety of circumstances. If the statement happens to be recorded in a document it must naturally possess greater value than when it depends upon the evidence of a witness who purports to have heard it. The Court in each case will also have to consider whether or not the statement in question bears on its face the appearances of truth, also the circumstances under which it came to be made, and whether or not the deceased person had a motive in making it or an object in naming the particular person whom he charges with complicity in the crime in question. These are all matters which affect the weight of the evidence and not its admissibility. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Fforde, J.). MOHAMMAD v. EMPEROR.

—S. 33—Compliance with section.

Strict proof of compliance with the provision is necessary specially in a murder trial—Reasons should be recorded before admission of evidence.

Per May Oung, J.—The power given by S. 33 requires to be exercised with great caution and the Court must insist on strict proof before holding that the requisite conditions have been satisfied. More especially is this necessary where a man is being tried for his life and the evidence sought to be put in is of signal importance. Moreover, it is essential that a Judge or Magistrate admitting such evidence should either in his judgment or preferably in a separate order record his reasons for doing so.

Per Lentaigne, J.—The section pre-supposes a consideration of the grounds for admission of the deposition prior to the admission of the evidence and if the grounds and reasons are recorded prior to the admission of the deposition as evidence, the order constitutes a more convincing proof of the considered adequacy of the grounds than a passage in a judgment subsequently written which in a case near the border line might easily assume the appearance of a subsequent statement of excuses for a previous ill-considered action. —Necessity of formal proof that books are kept in course of business has been dispensed with.

Under the old Evidence Act II of 1855, books to be admissible had to be proved to have been regularly kept in course of business. In the later Act I of 1872 the words "proved to have been" have dropped. This amounts to material alteration in the law. The legislature has dispensed with the necessity of any formal proof that the books were kept up in the regular course of business. It is a matter of intrinsic evidence as to whether the books in question were books of account and regularly kept in the regular course of business. The only limitation imposed by the statute is that the statement contained in the account books "shall not alone be sufficient to charge any one with liability." The value of the entries is corroborative and cannot be used as independent evidence to charge any person with liability. 18 All. 92, Rel. on.; 27 Cal. 118, Ref.; 4 Bom. 576, Dist. (Young and Sen, J.J.). —Penal Code, S. 193—Opinion of hand expert not examined on oath—Magistrate's own observation may be used as evidence.

Where in a trial for perjury in respect of a promissory note which the accused said on oath was in his handwriting, the Magistrate admitted in evidence the opinion of a handwriting expert against the accused without his being examined on oath and also had his own opinion after comparing the handwriting of the promissory note with various other handwritings, that the writing was not of the accused.

Held, that a conviction under S. 193 based on these materials is bad. The proposition that a Judge should not import his personal knowledge into his judgments and that if he wishes to rely on facts within his knowledge, he must go to the witness box and depose to them on oath is no doubt correct in the main, but it does not apply to facts of which a Judge is permitted to take judicial notice and nowhere in the Indian Evidence Act is it laid down that a Judge must not look at exhibits produced in Court or partly base his judgment on them. 11 W.R.Cr. 95, Foll. (MacColl, J.). —As to the probative value of the opinion of an expert on fingerprints, it must have the same value as the opinion of any other expert, such as a medical officer, etc. In each case the evidence is only a guide to the Court to direct its attention to judge of its value. The Court is at liberty to use its own discretion and to come to conclusion either in affirmation or differing from the view taken by the expert. Though it is not safe to convict an accused upon the sole testimony of an expert, yet the Court cannot refuse to convict a person on the evidence of a fingerprint expert, merely on the ground that it is unsafe to base a conviction upon such evidence: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 581; A. —It is not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue: *Makin v. —Poisoning by members—Presumption when arises.

A violent presumption that the deceased was poisoned by the members of the family arises, perhaps one of the strongest presumptions known to the law, when a man dies in his own house surrounded by his own family, and poisoned shortly after eating food which must have been prepared for him by his wife, and no explanation is forthcoming from the occupants of the household as to what had happened to him to cause his death, and where, in addition to such violent presumption, the persons accused are proved to have been guilty of persistent lying in an attempt to account for the absence of the deceased, and are also shown to have hidden the corpse to save themselves, the presumption becomes a certainty. —Charge of murder and theft—Possession of stolen property not explained—Accused cannot be presumed to have committed murder.

When the charge is that the accused committed murder or theft in a building or both, it is not legitimate to presume that the accused are guilty of the more serious offence of murder because they are unable or unwilling to explain their possession of stolen property, and when the unexplained possession of stolen property is the only circumstance appearing in the evidence against an accused they cannot be convicted of murder unless the Court is satisfied that possession of the property could not have been transferred from the deceased to the accused except by the former being murdered. The Presumption not confined to charges of theft but extends to all charges, however penal, not excluding even murder. The mere fact that an accused person points out the place in which stolen property is concealed does not give rise to any presumption under S. 114, or justify his conviction of the offence of receiving stolen property, still less of the offence of theft or dacoity. But if such property is produced from the house of the accused person a presumption would arise under S. 114, III. (a), that the accused was either the thief or had received the goods knowing them to be stolen unless he can account for his possession of the stolen articles: 17 All. 576, Ref. (Mirza and Broomfield, JJ.). EMPEROR v. —Possession of property 2 years after loss—Refusal to answer as to source—Adverse inference is justified.

Though usually a Court is not justified in drawing the presumption of guilty knowledge from possession of property such as jewellery nearly two years after the property had been stolen or otherwise lost to the real owner, the Court is always entitled to request the possessor to disclose the name of the person from whom he had obtained the articles and the particulars as to the origin of the possession and the Court is entitled to draw unfavourable inferences, if the accused refuses to disclose such facts or gives an explanation which can be shown to be false. —S. 114, III. (a)—Recent possession.

—What amounts to recent possession depends on facts of each case.

The question as to what amounts to recent possession sufficient to justify the presumption of guilt in any particular case, varies according as the stolen article is, or is not, calculated to readily pass from hand to hand: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 528; 11 M.L.W. 48; A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 89 and 22 C.W.N. 597, Rel. on. But the strength and nature of such presumption must vary according to the seriousness of the offence and the nature of the property involved. —S. 114, III. (a)—Time limit.

—No time limit can be fixed.

No fixed time-limit can be laid down to determine whether possession of articles is recent or otherwise. But every case must be judged on its own facts. If a few stolen articles were found in possession of a person under circumstances which may give rise to the probability of his coming by them honestly some time after the theft the presumption under the law might not arise against him. —Several accused—Corroboration as regards each accused—If necessary.

Per *Staples, A. J. The real test of the evidence of the approver is whether it has been believed or not and when it has been corroborated on many points and has not been shown to be false in any particular it should be accepted; and when once it has been accepted as a whole, corroboration as regards the identity of each of several accused should not be demanded. —Corroborative evidence itself need not be sufficient to base conviction on—Independent evidence showing in material points that the story of the accomplice is true, is sufficient corroboration.

The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged and it would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration, except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice, that the accused committed the crime, is true not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime.

Corroborative evidence need not be sufficient in itself to base a conviction on. Confirmation of the story of an accomplice does not mean that there should be independent evidence of the accomplice's account of the crime itself. What the law clearly requires is that some relevant and material part of the approver's story incriminating the accused should have support from an independent source. This supplies a test of the truth of the accomplice's narrative as a whole by checking it in some relevant portion. Rea v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 K. —"May" is not "must" and evidence of accomplice stands on same footing as other evidence.

Although S. 114, Illus. (b), provides that a Court may presume that the evidence of an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless corroborated, "may" is not "must" and no decision of Court can make it "must." Therefore in spite of all that has been said to the contrary in law, the evidence of an accomplice stands on the same footing as any other evidence. The Court is not obliged to hold that he is unworthy of credit and must be corroborated. It is for the Court to consider after taking into consideration all the circumstances one of which being that he is an accomplice whether it does or does not rely on the evidence. To entirely rule out the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice might in many cases lead to miscarriage of justice. (Cuming and Lort-Williams, JJ.). EMPEROR v. C. A. MATHEWS. 1929 Gr. C. 669= A. —Uncorroborated testimony.

Although a conviction is not "illegal" merely because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the rule of practice is now firmly established that corroboration of such testimony in material particulars connecting each of the individual accused with the crime is necessary to justify his conviction: A. —Credibility of approver.

The testimony of one accomplice is of little value as a piece of corroborative evidence in support of the testimony of another accomplice. The testimony of an approver can be used for the purpose of corroboration if the taint attached to it is removed. But this "taint" must be removed to such an extent that the Court is prepared to believe the testimony of the approver in the same way and to the same extent as the testimony of an ordinary witness whom it considers to be worthy of credit. —Evidence by child should be accepted with caution.

There is no more dangerous witness than young children. Any mistakes or discrepancies in their statements are ascribed to innocence of failure to understand, and undue weight is often given to what is merely a well taught lesson. Children have good memories and no conscience. They are easily taught stories and live in a world of make-believe so that they often become convinced that they have really seen the imaginary incident which they have been taught to relate. The evidence of a child should therefore be accepted with great caution. (Raza and Pullan, J.J.). MANNI v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 406.

—Sufficient understanding.

A child of tender years is a competent witness when such child is intellectually sufficiently developed to understand what it has seen and afterwards to inform the Court about it; this sufficiency may be tested even in examination-in-chief: understanding is thus the sole test of competency under S. 118: 38 All. 49, Foll.; 41 Cal. 406, Rel. on; 10 All. 207, *Expl. —Procedure before admitting child as a witness.

Before examining a child of tender years as a witness, a Court should satisfy itself that the child is sufficiently intellectually developed to comprehend what he has seen and to give an intelligent account of it to the Court, by testing his intellectual capacity, by putting a few and simple and ordinary questions to him and the Court should record a brief proceeding so that the appellate Court may feel satisfied as to the capacity of the child to give evidence. If the Court is of opinion that by reason of tender years and defective or immature understanding the child could not have perceived the particular incident to prove which he is produced as a witness, the Court should not only refrain from administering the oath to him but should also decline to examine him as a witness: 38 All. 49 and 11 C.W.N. 51, *Ref. —Capacity—Record of opinion as to, is not obligatory.

When the evidence of a child of tender years is adduced the Judicial Officer should for the sake of precaution ascertain as a preliminary measure by means of a few simple questions whether the intelligence of the child is such that (whether sworn or not) it is capable of giving testimony and it is certainly desirable that something should at the commencement of the record of the evidence of a witness of this character be entered to show that such a test has been in fact made. But the mere fact that the Judge omits to make the record will not render the evidence inadmissible, if the Judge is, as a matter of fact satisfied about the capacity to give the evidence. —Rule as to exclusion from Court—Inapplicable.

The rule as to the exclusion of the witnesses from Court until they have been examined is not without exceptions. It does not extend to the parties themselves in civil cases so long as they conduct themselves properly, or to their solicitors whose assistance is necessary for the proper conduct of the case. —S. 132—Compulsion.

What is.

The protection offered by S. 132, Proviso, does not cover any and every answer given by a witness during the course of his trial. The compulsion contemplated in that section is something more than being put into the witness-box and being sworn to give evidence. The compulsion in the proviso refers to compulsion by Court and not compulsion under law. The witness, of course, need not ask in so many words the protection of the Court. The compulsion may be implied or explicit, and in every case it is a question of fact whether there was or was not compulsion. But a witness who answers a question or questions put to him without seeking the protection of S. 132 by objecting to the question put, and requesting to be excused, is not entitled to that protection. 3 Mad. 271 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 141 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 906 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1924 All. 381; 16 All. 88; 40 All. 271, Foll.; 42 All. 257 and A.I.R. 1921 All. 362, Not foll.; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 379; A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 845, Dist. (Devadoss and Waller, J.J.). *PEDDABHA REDDI v. —Accomplice and informer—Distinction.

In criminal cases the distinction between an informer and an accomplice assumes at times considerable importance, and in order to determine whether a witness who first associated with wrongdoers and subsequently gave information to the police belongs to the first category or is an accomplice whose evidence cannot be accepted without corroboration, it has to be seen whether the witness had entered into the conspiracy for the sole purpose of detecting and betraying it or whether he is a person who concurred fully in the criminal designs of his co-conspirators for a time and joined in the execution of those till either out of fear or for some other reasons he turned on his former associates and gave information to the police. If at the time when he joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book, but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice; and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the police: A. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 133—Conviction on uncorroborated testimony.

If at the time when a person joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the police.

A person was present when the plans for committing a dacoity were hatched and had agreed to go to the meeting place in the evening armed with a revolver. He returned soon after and remained there for more than six hours but during this period he took no steps whatever either to inform the police or his master that a dacoity was contemplated. He then actually proceeded to a spot near the house where the dacoity was to be committed and took part in the preparations for committing the offence. It was only after it had been decided to postpone the dacoity till the moon had gone down and he had been sent to the town to bring food for two of the offenders that he for the first time disclosed the whole affair.

Held, that in view of these facts the person cannot but be regarded as an accomplice and his evidence needs corroboration in material particulars against each convict. (Tek Chand, J.). KARIM BAKHSI v. EMPEROR. 109 I.C. 593=9 Lah. 550=29 Cr. L.J. 577=10 A.I.Cr.R. 293=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 193.

—S. 133—Conviction on uncorroborated testimony.

—In law the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is sufficient to uphold a conviction provided there is any reason to suppose that it is true. Thus if an accomplice makes a clean breast of the crime and convinces the Court that he is speaking the truth the Court can accept his evidence against his fellow offender. But if so far from making a clean breast of it, he consorts a story of his perfect innocence saying that the fellow offender committed the crime the Court cannot in the same breath refuse to accept the story and convict the fellow offender. (Jackson, J.). KUPPUSWAMY IYER, In re. 1930 M.W.N. 169.

—It is not safe to convict on the sole testimony of accomplice unless corroborated in material particulars by direct or circumstantial evidence.

The evidence of accomplices is always admissible and is always relevant, but under a very old practice of the Courts in England some evidence is accepted only with great caution and after the closest scrutiny and is not usually accepted against any individual person unless it is corroborated. Although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justified. The practice in India is the same as the practice in England. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime, it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime: A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 369, *Ref. A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 455.

—It is nowhere laid down as an inflexible proposition of law that a conviction cannot be based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice; but it is the usual practice of the Courts to require corroboration of the story of the approver before declaring an accused person to be guilty of a crime. The amount or kind of corroboration required in a particular case must, however, depend upon the peculiar circumstances of that case. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Bhide, J.). NARAIN v. EMPEROR. 107 I.C. 97=9 A.I. Cr. R. 497=29 Cr. L.J. 209.

Co-accused and accomplice—Difference explained.

A confession of an accused person implicating a co-accused under S. 30 cannot be considered as the same thing as 'the testimony of an accomplice, which is referred to in S. 133. Section 133 contemplates that the accomplice shall be examined as a witness. This being so, the provision that a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, has no application to the case of an uncorroborated confession taken into consideration as against a co-accused jointly tried with the confessing accused under S. 30. Therefore an accused person cannot be convicted solely on such a confession made by a co-accused: 9 C. P. L. R. 85 Cr. and 87 Cr.; 24 W. R. (Cr.) 42; 98 Cal. 559, *Rel. on. (Kinkhede, A. J. —Judge should direct the jury that they can legally convict.

There is no doubt that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law. But it has long been a rule of practice for the Judge to warn the Jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or accomplices and in the discretion of the Judge to advise them not to convict upon such evidence but the Judge should point out to the Jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence. Conviction on uncorroborated evidence, when approver is a scoundrel is not warranted.

The decision in each case must depend on its own particular circumstances and no general rule can be laid down as to when an accomplice's uncorroborated evidence alone should be accepted and acted on against an accused. A conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is to be regarded as exceptional. The two illustrations given under S. 114 of the Act clearly indicate that the application of S. 133 must be exceedingly rare. There is no positive legal bar to taking an approver's evidence as a basis for a conviction but unless some reliable corroboration on a material point were superadded to it, it would, in almost all cases, be unsafe to accept it as conclusive. Where in several respects the approver's evidence did not appear to the Trial Court to be quite satisfactory and the likelihood of his "playing a double game" strongly suggested itself at one time, and the approver was a thorough paced scoundrel.

Held, that the uncorroborated testimony of the approver did not afford a sufficient foundation for conviction. (May Oung, J.). MAUNG LAY v. EMPEROR.

Per Staples, A. J. C. The real test of the evidence of the approver is whether it has been believed or not and when it has been corroborated on many points and has not been shown to be false in any particular it should be accepted; and when once it has been accepted as a whole corroboration as regards the identity of each of several accused should not be demanded: A. —There is no definite rule of law that a person cannot be convicted upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. But Ill. (b) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act is the rule such cases and Courts must act up to it. If the suspicion which attaches to the evidence of an accomplice be not removed that evidence should not be acted upon unless corroborated in material particulars. Rule as to corroboration elaborately discussed. (Scooke and Chatterji, JJ.). EMPEROR v. KAILASH MISSIR. 11 P. L. T. 545.

—Principles explained.

Although under S. 133, Evidence Act, an accomplice is a competent witness against an accused person, and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of such accomplice, the rule of caution that such testimony should be supported by extrinsic evidence connecting the accused with the crime is now regarded as a rule of law, and although it is not illegal to convict a person on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver, the Courts in points of facts always insist upon the rule being followed.

What is required is some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice is true and that it is reasonably safe to act upon it.

The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged and it would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration, except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice, that the accused committed the crime, is true not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime.

Corroborative evidence need not be sufficient in itself to base a conviction on. Confirmation of the story of an accomplice does not mean that there should be independent evidence of the accomplice's account of the crime itself. What the law clearly requires is that some relevant and material part of the approver's story incriminating the accused should have support from an independent source. This supplies a test of the truth of the accomplice's narrative as a whole by checking it in some relevant portion: Re v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 K. B. 658, Foll.

—Corroboration as to the part played by the accomplice.

It is not sufficient that the approver should be corroborated with regard to the actual commission of the crime itself; for such corroboration merely shows that he himself took part in the offence. Experience requires that the approver should also be corroborated in material points as to the part played by his accomplices. The amount of corroboration in this respect as indeed in respect of all corroboration of an approver's evidence, must depend upon the view which the Court takes of the approver's character and of his general demeanour in the witness-box. The evidence of an approver must be corroborated in material particulars, and those material particulars should connect the accused persons with the crime.

In a charge for theft and murder the approver in no way sought to exculpate himself so far as the conspiracy to commit theft and the theft itself was concerned, nor so far as regards conspiring to commit murder, though he exculpated himself so far as the actual murder was concerned. The story of the approver so far as a conspiracy to commit theft and the actual theft was corroborated, and the circumstances showed that the persons who committed theft were the same who committed the murder.

There is no statutory prohibition against accepting the evidence of an approver who is thoroughly unreliable and base a conviction upon his uncorroborated testimony, but to do so is extremely dangerous especially where such evidence when examined is obviously open to criticism from the point of view of possible mistake, or intentional concealment or misrepresentation. The confession of a criminal who has confessed his guilt, in so far as it implicates other persons besides himself, must be treated as very little if at all superior in value to that of an accomplice who has received a pardon and therefore where the Court has a witness belonging to each of these classes the question necessarily arises as a matter of logic whether unless

It is generally unsafe to convict a person on the evidence of accomplices unless corroborated in material particulars. In considering whether this maxim applies to a particular case it must be remembered that all persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot be treated on precisely the same footing.

Accomplice evidence is untrustworthy for three reasons:—(i) He is likely to swear falsely to shift the guilt from him; (ii) He being a participator in crime is likely to disregard the sanction of an oath; and (iii) He gives evidence under promise of or in expectation of a pardon. Therefore if the principal evidence is of accomplices, it is tainted evidence and hence there is need for corroboration. 26 Bom. 193; 14 Bom. 115, Foll. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). MUHAMMAD USUF KHAN v. His evidence under such circumstances could not be a piece of independent evidence. An accomplice witness against whom the case has been withdrawn under S. 494 is less reliable than one to whom a pardon has been tendered under S. 387. The latter is pardoned conditionally and has before him, as an inducement to stick to the truth, the constant apprehension that his statement may be used against him in a trial hereafter if he is proved to have given false evidence on any point. On the other hand the accomplice witness who has not received a conditional pardon is a freer man in the witness-box since he is not pinned down to a previous statement which may be based on tutored material by the fear of prosecution for, perjury if his deposition in Court does not correspond exactly with that previous statement. In the case of a gang the members of which had been collected from an area with a diameter of over fifty miles, and had been concerned in dacoities in the course of which more than a hundred different individuals had taken part in the offences and where the offences had continued over a period of four years, it would almost be a miracle if any man had been able consistently to identify correctly every man who had taken part in these offences, or who had belonged to the gang. No doubt, in such a case the failure of an approver to identify a particular man on one occasion, although he identified him on others, weakens his evidence considerably in respect to that particular man. But this circumstance does not show such a man to be innocent and cannot outweigh other evidence which establishes his guilt. Even where the approver's evidence is weak against a particular individual, that particular individual should be convicted when there is strong evidence apart from the evidence of the approver to establish that he was a member of the gang. S. 133—Miscellaneous.*If one section is controlled by the other.

Per Subhedar, A. J. C.—The rule in S. 114, Illus. (b), that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars has become a rule of practice of so universal application that it has now almost acquired the force of law.

Per Jackson, A. J. C.—S. 133 cannot be entirely nullified by judicial decisions and there may be cases in which the rule in S. 114, Illus. (b), should not be applied. The question arising in every case where the uncorroborated evidence of the accomplice has to be considered is whether it can be believed or not. Further when the evidence is strengthened by corroboration of other facts of the story by evidence of several accomplices or by confessions of co-accused, the question whether the maxim should still apply must receive careful consideration: A.I.R. 1921 Nag. 39, Rel. on. (*Jackson, A. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 133—Mode of examination.*Duty of prosecution to show that evidence is of accomplices and is corroborated.

It is mainly the duty of the prosecution to bring the accomplice character of the evidence to the notice of the Court and then invite it to believe it by reference to the corroborative evidence on record. An accused is under no legal obligation to do so. He can keep quiet and take advantage of the flaw in the evidence brought by the prosecution against him, or in short, of the weakness of the prosecution case. (Kinkhede, A. J. C.). MUHAMMAD USAF KHAN v. EMPEROR. 114 I. C. 457 = 30 Cr. L. J. 311 = 1929 Cr. C. 110 = A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 215.

Impossibility of corroborative evidence does not dispense with necessity thereof.

It would be a perversion of the lesson gained by accumulated experience of the conduct of an accomplice to adopt any such rule of practice as that where corroboration is not possible his testimony may be accepted as true without corroboration. An accomplice is too immoral a person to be worthy of credit without corroboration in material particulars and if corroboration is not forthcoming because it is not possible in the nature of things that it should be forthcoming it does not make the accomplice less immoral. The guiding rule in this behalf is furnished by Illus. (b) of S. 114. (Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.). MANNA LAL v. KING EMPEROR. 75 I.C. 783 = 27 O.C. 40 = 25 Cr. L.J. 49 = A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 1.

—Compliance with section necessary.

Under S. 162, Cr. P. Code., a statement made before the investigating officer can be used for the purpose of contradicting such witness when produced at the trial but after strict compliance with the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act.

If the witness admits to have made the statement the previous statement in writing need not be proved. If he denies to have made any such statement and it is intended to contradict him the relevant portions of the record contrary to his statement in Court must be read to him and the witness should be given the opportunity to reconcile the same. It is only after this is done that the record of the previous statement becomes admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting the witness and can then be proved in any manner provided by law. (Jai Lal and Bhide, J.J.). GOPI CHAND v. EMPEROR. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 491.

—If the entire statement is no part of the judicial record.

Only those portions of statements made by witnesses before the police as have been actually used under S. 162, Cr. P. Code., to contradict the witnesses in the manner provided in S. 145, in the course of their cross-examination or re-examination are parts of the judicial record and can be treated as evidence in a case. The other parts of the statements cannot be relied upon by the prosecution or the defence in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused and should not be referred to by the Judge. —Cr. P. Code, S. 162—Stage when it can be used.

So far as proceedings before charge are concerned, copies of witnesses, statements made to the police should not be granted until the stage of cross-examination is reached. If that stage is allowed to go by without application being made, an accused must wait until the witness is again about to be subjected to cross-examination before he can claim grant of a copy. Under S. 145, until the occasion arises for putting the statement to the witness it cannot legally be used for any purpose whatsoever. It should not therefore be placed in the accused's hands until that stage in the trial has been reached when he may so use it. (Curgenven, J.). PUBLIC PROSECUTOR, MADRAS v. VEDI. 122 I.C. 463=2 M. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 145—Statements to police.

—Procedure indicated.

A copy of the statement made before the police cannot be used against the witness till he has been confronted with it. The right procedure, when a prosecution witness is contradicting himself, is to ask the Judge to look into the diary and decide whether the accused person should not have a copy of the statement. If such copy be granted, the witness's attention must be called to the same: A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 7, Ref. (Mears, C.J. and Mukerjee, J.). KASHI RAM v. EMPEROR. 109 I.C. 120=26 A.L.J. 139=9 A.I. Cr. —How they can be used.

The only way a witness can be contradicted by statements made to the police under the provisions of S. 162, Cr. P. Code, is to prove his written statement and put it to the witness under S. 145, Indian Evidence Act, to permit him to explain the contradictions, if any. Statements made to the police cannot be used at a trial in any other way. (Addison and Kemp, J.J.). EMPEROR v. IBRAHIM. 105 I.C. 807=8 Lah. 605=28 P.L.R. 649=28 Cr. L.J. 983=9 A.I. Cr. R. 132=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 17.

—First information report—Statement by third parties to police during investigation and counter-information against complainant or his party—Principles explained.

The first information report against the accused is clearly not a statement within the contemplation of S. 162 because it is not made in the course of an investigation. Such report has to be tendered under one or other of the provisions of the Evidence Act. The usual course is for the prosecution to call the informant and for the first information to be tendered as corroboration under S. 157; but it could also be tendered in a proper case under S. 32 (1) as a declaration as to the cause of the informant's death, or as part of the informant's conduct (of the res gestae) under S. 8. Theoretically, the defence could prove the information to impeach the informant's credit under S. 155 or to contradict him under S. 145.

Statements made by third parties to the police in the course of their investigation can be used as corroboration under S. 157, or in contradiction under S. 145 or to impeach credit under S. 155 provided the person who made the statement is called as a witness. This would apply to the prosecution and to the defence indifferently under the Evidence Act. But S. 162 of the Cr. P. Code enacts first that if such a statement is not recorded in writing it cannot be used in evidence in any circumstance or for either side or for any purpose: A.I.R. 1920 Rang. 116 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 399 and A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 510, Foll.

If such a statement has been recorded in writing then it cannot be used for any purpose but one and that by the defence. Provided that the person who made it is called as a witness for the prosecution the defence may apply for a copy of the statement and if it be proved may use it under S. 145 of the Evidence Act to contradict that witness.

It sometimes happens that after the first information has been laid against the accused, a counter-information is laid against the complainant or his party by a member of the accused's party who is not himself an accused. As this comes under S. 154 and must be reduced to writing and signed, it cannot come within S. 162. Whether it is admissible at the trial of the accused will depend upon the circumstances and must be decided under Evidence Act. —S. 143—Leading questions.

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 145—Statements to police.

—If may be asked without declaring witness hostile.

Section 154 read with S. 143 provides that the Court may allow the party to put leading questions to his own witnesses. This does not necessarily mean that he must declare the witness hostile and cross-examine him. It is only when he declares the witness hostile and cross-examines him that he cannot rely upon his evidence. Where the Public Prosecutor asks a witness some questions with the permission of the Court desiring to get from him not a contradiction of what he said but something in addition, he cannot be said to have cross-examined the witness. The questions are merely leading questions.

Per Lort-Williams, J., contra.—Sections 143 and 154 read together do not give power to prosecution to put leading questions to their own witnesses even with the assent of the Judge. The meaning of S. 154 is that with permission of the Court they may treat a witness hostile and cross-examine him. (Cuming and Lort-Williams, JJ.). BIKRAM ALI PRAMANIK v. EMPEROR. 50 C.L.J. 467= —Procedure explained.

The party desiring to cross-examine its own witness has to take the permission of the Court, implying thereby that there is a discretion in the Court whether it would permit the witness to be cross-examined or not. That discretion has always to be exercised with caution by the Court before which the matter comes up for consideration. Putting questions by way of cross-examination to one's own witness without the permission of the Court is a procedure not to be allowed. (Cuming and Mukerji, JJ.). KHJIRUDDIN v. EMPEROR. 92 I. —S. 154—Hostile witness.

A hostile witness may be defined as one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence (within which is included the fact that he is willing to go back upon previous statements made by him) shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court. —Ground for discrediting a witness as hostile.

The grounds that witnesses do not support the prosecution story, but they are neighbours of the accused and they have been won over by them, that one of them is a tout and the other is a man of straw and quite unreliable, are no reasons for declaring the witnesses hostile; and unless there is something in their depositions which is conflicting with earlier statements made by them, which would afford ground for thinking that they have been gained over by the defence, the prosecution is not entitled to declare them hostile. The fact that the witnesses are neighbours of the accused is not sufficient ground for treating them as hostile in order to discredit the statements that they made favourable to the defence. —S. 154—Purpose of cross-examination.

—To obtain admission on which party cross-examining may rely.

A party is allowed to cross-examine its own witness because that witness displays hostility and not necessarily because he displays untruthfulness. The main purpose of such cross-examination is to obtain admissions and it would be ridiculous to assert that a party cross-examining a witness is thereby prevented from relying on admissions and to hold that the fact that the witness is being cross-examined implies an admission by the cross-examiner that all the witnesses' statements are falsehoods: A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 501, Rel. on; Bradley v. Ricardo, (1881) 8 Bing. 57, Rel.

—S. 154—Result of cross-examination.

Position of hostile witness—Rule as to.

The evidence of a hostile witness cannot in part be relied upon and the rest of it discarded or rejected. When a witness is declared hostile so that leave to cross-examine is granted to the party calling him, it is necessary that the Judge should explain what the position is that then arises, namely that by asking for leave to cross-examine the witness, the party calling him admits that he is not a witness of truth and one whose evidence is not entitled to credit, who is prepared to make one statement on oath at one time and another at another time and that the evidence of such witness should be rejected and left out of account in the minds of the jury. It is a rule which leans in favour of the accused and as such ought not to be departed from lightly. The Judge should tell the jury to reject the evidence of such witness altogether and his omission to do so amounts to misdirection: A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 463; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 556, Ref. (C. C. Ghose and Pearson, J.J.). PANCHANAN GOGAI v. EMPEROR. 51 C.L.J. 203=34 C.W.N. 526=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 276.

No reliance in part.

A party cannot be allowed to say that his witness is a truthful witness so far as a part of his evidence is concerned but an untruthful witness so far as some other portion is concerned. Once a party cross-examines his own witness he must be held to no longer rely on him: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139 and A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 463, Rel. on. (Cuming and Lort-Williams, J.J.). MOKBUL KHAN v. EMPEROR.

32 C.W.N. 872=A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 690.

Discrediting certain statements does not amount to discrediting whole of the evidence.

Seeking to discredit the statements of witnesses considered hostile only on certain points does not amount to discrediting the evidence in toto, of these witnesses, and it must be a matter for the Court, on the particular facts in each case to credit or to discredit the different portions of the evidence of each witness as in other cases: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139, Diss. (Crump and Madgavkar, J.J.). EMPEROR v. JEHANGIR ARDESHIR. 106 I.C. 100=8 A.I. Cr. R. 324=29 Bom. L.R. 996=28 Cr. L.J. 1012=A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 501.

When a witness who has been called by the prosecution is permitted to be cross-examined on behalf of the prosecution under the provisions of S. 154, the result of that course being permitted is to discredit that witness altogether and not merely to get rid of a part of his testimony. (Cuming and Mukerji, J.J.). KHJIRUDDIN v. EMPEROR. 92 I.C. 442=53 Cal. 372=42 C.L.J. 504=27 Cr. L.J. 266=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139.

If they tell a different story in Court, the report can be used to

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.*—S. 167—Duty of appellate Court.

—Reception of inadmissible evidence.

What a Court of appeal, has to consider is whether the reception of inadmissible evidence influenced the minds of the jury so seriously as to lead them to a conclusion which might have been different but for its reception. Hence where inadmissible evidence has been admitted, there are two points for consideration firstly whether the reception of the inadmissible evidence has in fact occasioned a failure of justice, and secondly whether if it is excluded, there was sufficient evidence to justify the verdict of the jury. (Sanderson and Chotener, JJ.). HARENDRA NATH v. EMPEROR.

—S. 167—Objection about admissibility.

—C. P. C., S. 100—Objection can be taken for first time in second appeal.

An erroneous omission to object to inadmissible evidence does not make it admissible. The omission to take objection to the admissibility of a document becomes fatal only in cases where if the objection is taken in time, any defect in its admissibility can be cured and the document made admissible. In other cases objection as to inadmissibility can be raised even in second appeal though it was not raised in the lower Courts: 19 All. 76 (P. C.), *Foll. —S. 167—Other evidence sufficient.

—Under S. 167 it is permissible for High Court in spite of the improper admission of a confession in evidence to uphold the conviction if independently of the evidence objected to there is sufficient evidence to justify the decision of the Sessions Judge.
